“Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “enlightenment will not be attained by means of the path, nor will it be attained by means of that which is not the path. Enlightenment itself is the path and the path itself is enlightenment.” {Ki.VIII:124}

66.28 “Blessed Lord, if enlightenment itself is the path and the path itself is enlightenment, then bodhisattva great beings will have already attained enlightenment, so why then is it taught that the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas are described in accordance with the thirty-two major marks of a great person, [F.299.b] the eighty excellent minor marks, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas?”

66.29 “Subhūti, do you think that the buddhas attain enlightenment?” asked the Blessed One.

“No, Blessed Lord! The buddhas do not attain enlightenment. The buddhas are themselves enlightenment, and enlightenment is itself the buddhas.”

66.30 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “you just said bodhisattva great beings will have already attained enlightenment. In this regard, Subhūti, after perfecting the perfections; after perfecting all the aspects of emptiness; after perfecting the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment; after perfecting the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways; and after perfecting the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas, bodhisattva great beings will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, through the unique instant of wisdom that is the vajra-like meditative stability.<sup>556</sup> And in the period after they have attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, [F.300.a] those bodhisattvas are said to be omniscient tathāgatas who have mastered all phenomena.”

66.31 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, if all phenomena are devoid of inherent existence, how do bodhisattva great beings refine the buddhafiels?”

“In this regard, Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “commencing from their setting of the mind on enlightenment, bodhisattva great beings purify themselves and others of the factors of body, speech, and mind that take on negative states. {Ki.VIII: 125} Through those acts of purification they refine the buddhafi elds.” [B73]

66.32 “Blessed Lord, what are the factors of the body that take on negative states, the factors of speech that take on negative states, and the factors of mind that take on negative states?”

The Blessed One replied, “Physical nonvirtuous actions—the killing of living creatures, the stealing of what is not given, and sexual misconduct due to desire—constitute factors of the body that take on negative states for a bodhisattva. Verbal nonvirtuous actions—the telling of lies, slander, verbal abuse, and irresponsible chatter—constitute factors of speech that take on negative states for a bodhisattva. Mental nonvirtuous actions—covetousness, malice, and wrong views—constitute factors of mind that take on negative states for a bodhisattva.

66.33 “Moreover, Subhūti, thoughts of miserliness are factors of mind that take on negative states for a bodhisattva. Thoughts of degenerate morality, thoughts of agitation, [F.300.b] thoughts of indolence, thoughts of distraction, thoughts of noncomposure, and thoughts of stupidity are factors of mind that take on negative states for a bodhisattva.

66.34 “Moreover, Subhūti, impure ethical discipline is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The lack of the four applications of mindfulness is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The lack of the four correct exertions, the four supports for miraculous ability, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The lack of the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva.

66.35 “Moreover, Subhūti, the actualizing of or longing for the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The actualizing of or longing for the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The actualizing of or longing for the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The actualizing of or longing for arhatship is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. The actualizing of or longing for individual enlightenment is a factor that takes on negative states for a bodhisattva. {Ki.VIII: 126}

66.36 “Moreover, Subhūti, any notion of physical forms constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, or consciousness constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. [F.301.a] Any notion of the eyes constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of the ears, nose, tongue, body, or mental faculty constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of sights constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of sounds, odors, tastes, tangibles, or mental phenomena constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of visual consciousness constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of auditory consciousness, olfactory consciousness, gustatory consciousness, tactile consciousness, or mental consciousness constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of visually compounded sensory contact constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of aurally compounded sensory contact, nasally compounded sensory contact, lingually compounded sensory contact, corporeally compounded sensory contact, or mentally compounded sensory contact constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of feelings conditioned by visually compounded sensory contact constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of feelings conditioned by aurally compounded sensory contact, feelings conditioned by nasally compounded sensory contact, feelings conditioned by lingually compounded sensory contact, feelings conditioned by corporeally compounded sensory contact, or feelings conditioned by mentally compounded sensory contact constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of the earth element constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of the water element, the fire element, the wind element, the space element, or the consciousness element constitutes a factor that takes on negative states.

66.37 “Any notion of ignorance constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of formative predispositions, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, sensory contact, sensation, craving, grasping, the rebirth process, actual birth, or aging and death constitutes a factor that takes on negative states.

66.38 “Any notion of women constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. [F.301.b] Any notion of men constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of the realm of desire constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of the realm of form or the realm of formlessness constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. Any notion of virtuous phenomena, any notion of nonvirtuous phenomena, any notion of mundane phenomena, any notion of supramundane phenomena, any notion of contaminated phenomena, any notion of uncontaminated phenomena, any notion of conditioned phenomena, or any notion of unconditioned phenomena constitutes a factor that takes on negative states. These, Subhūti, constitute the factors of the body that take on negative states, the factors of speech that take on negative states, and the factors of mind that take on negative states.

66.39 “When bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they have abandoned all these aspects of the factors that take on negative states. They themselves dispense generosity and they also encourage others to [dispense] generosity. That is to say, they give food to those who need food, they give drink to those who need drink, they give clothing to those who need clothing, and they give [other gifts], up to and including all human necessities and resources whatsoever, to those who need them. They also encourage others to [give those gifts], up to and including all human necessities and resources whatsoever, and establish them there. {Ki.VIII: 127} Making common cause with all beings, they then dedicate all these roots of virtuous action, as many as there are, so that the buddhafiels might be refined.

66.40 “They themselves maintain ethical discipline and they also encourage others to maintain ethical discipline. They themselves cultivate tolerance and they also encourage others to [cultivate] tolerance. They themselves undertake acts of perseverance and they also encourage others to [undertake] acts of perseverance. They themselves are absorbed in meditative concentration and they also encourage others to [be absorbed in] meditative concentration. [F.302.a] They themselves cultivate wisdom and they also encourage others to [cultivate] wisdom, and they settle, discipline, and establish them there. Making common cause with all beings, they then dedicate these roots of virtuous action so that the buddhafiels might be refined. They fill the world systems of the great trichiliocosm with the seven precious materials, and offer them to the Three Precious Jewels, indeed thinking, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may this buddhafiels of mine be fashioned of the seven precious materials!’

66.41 “Moreover, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings play divine music in the presence of the buddhas or alongside the reliquary stūpas of the buddhas, while thinking, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may the pleasant sound of divine music always arise, without interruption, in this buddhafiels of mine!’

66.42 “Moreover, Subhūti, they fill the world systems of the great trichiliocosm with divine perfumes, and they worship the buddhas or the reliquary stūpas of the buddhas, while thinking, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may the fragrance of divine perfume always arise, without interruption, in this buddhafiels of mine!’

- 66.43 “Moreover, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings make offerings of food with a hundred flavors to the tathāgatas or to the śrāvakas of the tathāgatas, while thinking, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may I attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, in this buddhafiield of mine, and may foods<sup>557</sup> with a hundred flavors materialize for the saṅgha of śrāvakas!’ [F.302.b]
- 66.44 “Moreover, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings make offerings of divine unguents to the tathāgatas or to the reliquary stūpas of the tathāgatas, while thinking, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may all beings of this buddhafiield where I attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment possess divine unguents.’<sup>558</sup> {Ki.VIII: 128}
- 66.45 “Moreover, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings, simply through the good intentions that arise in their minds, think that they should make offerings and donate pleasant sights, sounds, odors, tastes, and tangibles to the lord buddhas, the śrāvakas, and all beings, and when they have such thoughts, they further think, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may I attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, in this buddhafiield of mine, and, simply through the good intentions that arise in my mind, may the saṅgha of śrāvakas and all beings, too, acquire pleasant sights, sounds, odors, tastes, and tangibles!’
- 66.46 “Moreover, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they think, ‘Now I should become absorbed in the first meditative concentration. I should also establish all beings in the first meditative concentration. Now I should become absorbed in the second, third, and fourth meditative concentrations. I should also establish all beings in the fourth meditative concentration [and so forth]. [F.303.a] Now I should become absorbed in loving kindness. I should also establish all beings in loving kindness. Now I should be absorbed in compassion, empathetic joy, and equanimity. I should also establish all beings in equanimity [and so forth]. Now I should be absorbed in the sphere of infinite space. I should also establish all beings in the sphere of infinite space. Now I should be absorbed in the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, and the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception. I should also establish all beings in the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception [and so forth].
- 66.47 “ ‘Now I should cultivate the applications of mindfulness. I should also establish all beings in the applications of mindfulness. Now I should cultivate the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path. I should also establish all beings in the noble eightfold path [and so

66.48 “When they think in that manner, they should also reflect, ‘Through these roots of virtuous action, may all beings of this buddhafiield where I attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment not be separated from the four meditative concentrations, may they not be separated from the four immeasurable attitudes, and may they not be separated from the four formless absorptions, [F.303.b] the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment, {Ki.VIII: 129} or the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness!’

66.49 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they will refine the buddhafiields. They will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment until all these wishes have been fulfilled. They themselves will possess all the roots of virtuous action, and they will also cause all those beings to possess the roots of virtuous action. Their own body will be beautiful<sup>559</sup> and the beings who have been brought to maturation by those bodhisattva great beings will also manifest a noble, beautiful, and pleasant physical appearance because they have been favored by their merits. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings will refine the buddhafiields in that manner, such that by any means even the concept of ‘three lower realms’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘false views’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘desire, hatred, and delusion’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘women and men’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘the two vehicles’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘impermanence, suffering, and nonself’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘recipient’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘I and mine’ will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘latent impulses and obsessions’ [F.304.a] will no longer exist; even the concept of ‘erroneous views’ will no longer exist; and even the concept of the ‘fruits’ will no longer exist. On the other hand, in accordance with the wishes of all those beings, the sound of emptiness, the sound of signlessness, the sound of wishlessness, the sound of nonarising and nonceasing, the sound of the nonessential nature of all phenomena, and the sound of all phenomena that are empty of all phenomena will emerge from the rustling of trees by the wind and from external and internal objects, as will the expression that the essential nature of all phenomena is definitively devoid of essential nature. ‘Whether the tathāgatas appear, or whether the tathāgatas do not appear, all phenomena are empty of all phenomena. That which is empty is signless, and that which is signless is wishless.’ Day and night, the sound of the teaching of the Dharma in expressions such as these will emerge without interruption and at all times, whether they are walking, whether they are standing, whether they are sitting, or whether they are lying down. It is in that manner that they will refine the buddhafiels.

66.50 “And in such buddhafiels, once these [bodhisattvas] have indeed attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, all the lord buddhas present in the world systems of the ten directions will speak in praise of them as tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas. {Ki.VIII: 130} All beings who hear the name of these [new] tathāgatas will certainly attain unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. And when these [new] tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas teach the Dharma, no beings will hesitate, wondering whether this is the Dharma, or whether this is not the Dharma. [F.304.b] If you ask why, it is because in the reality of phenomena, there is nothing at all that is not the Dharma. All phenomena indeed constitute the Dharma.

66.51 “In this regard, those beings who are overwhelmed by the roots of nonvirtuous action and who have not developed the roots of virtuous action under [the guidance of] the buddhas or śrāvakas of the buddhas, and who have been guided by nonvirtuous associates, will be submerged within the view of self and they will be submerged within all other aspects of false view, settling in the extreme of eternalism or nihilism. Gripped by misapprehension, they have the notion that those who are not completely awakened buddhas are completely awakened buddhas, and the notion that those who are completely awakened buddhas are not completely awakened buddhas. They profess that that which is not the Dharma is the Dharma, and that that which is the Dharma is not the Dharma. They will abandon the Dharma, and having abandoned the Dharma in that manner, after they have passed away, they will through their errors fall into lower realms, inferior states of existence, and they will be reborn in the hells. For the sake of such individuals, the lord buddhas, having attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, will liberate those beings embroiled in cyclic existence from those aspects of negative view, and having freed them in that manner, will establish them in the category of those whose receptivity is certain.<sup>560</sup> Those who are established in it will thenceforth not fall into inferior realms. Subhūti, it is in this manner that bodhisattva great beings refine the buddhafiels. In consequence of having refined them accordingly, beings will not find stability in anything at all, whether mundane phenomena, supramundane phenomena, contaminated phenomena, uncontaminated phenomena, [F.305.a] conditioned phenomena, or unconditioned phenomena, until they definitively attain unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.”

66.52 This completes the sixty-sixth chapter from "The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines."

CHAPTER 67

67.1 Then the venerable Subhūti asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, are bodhisattva great beings certain to progress or is their progress uncertain?”

“Bodhisattva great beings are certain to progress, their progress is not uncertain,” replied the Blessed One.

67.2 “Are they certain to progress in the category of the śrāvakas, in the category of the pratyekabuddhas, in the category of the buddhas, or in what category?”

“Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “bodhisattva great beings are not certain to progress in the category of the śrāvakas. They are not certain to progress in the category of the pratyekabuddhas. But, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings are certain to progress in the category of the buddhas.”

67.3 “Blessed Lord, are bodhisattva great beings who have first begun to set their mind on enlightenment certain to progress, {Ki.VIII: 131} or else are irreversible bodhisattvas certain to progress?”

“Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “bodhisattva great beings who have initially set their minds on enlightenment are certain to progress. Irreversible bodhisattvas are also certain to progress. Those who are impeded by only a single rebirth are also certain to progress.”

67.4 “Blessed Lord, will bodhisattva great beings who are certain to progress be reborn in the inferior realms?”

“No, Subhūti!” replied the Blessed One. “Subhūti, [F.305.b] bodhisattva great beings who are certain to progress will not be reborn in the inferior realms! Subhūti, do you think that one who is on the eighth-lowest level, one who has entered the stream to nirvāṇa, one who is destined for only one more rebirth, one who is no longer subject to rebirth, an arhat, or a pratyekabuddha will be reborn in the inferior realms?”

No, Blessed Lord!”

67.5 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “it is impossible that bodhisattva great beings who, from the time when they first begin to set their mind on enlightenment, dispense generosity, maintain ethical discipline, practice tolerance, undertake acts of perseverance, are absorbed in meditative stability, cultivate wisdom, and are settled on abandoning all nonvirtuous attributes should be reborn in the inferior realms. It is impossible that they should be reborn among long-lived gods! It is impossible that they should be reborn as mentally handicapped or dumb individuals. It is impossible that they should be reborn among barbarous frontier tribesmen who are unruly, living in places where the four assemblies [of monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen] are unknown. It is impossible for them to be reborn in such places where even the word buddha is not heard, where even the word Dharma is not heard, and where even the word saṅgha is not heard. It is impossible for them to fall into the false view of inaction.<sup>561</sup> Subhūti, it is impossible that bodhisattva great beings who, commencing from the time when they first begin to set their mind on enlightenment, entering upon unsurpassed, complete enlightenment with higher aspiration, should adopt the ways of the ten nonvirtuous actions!”

67.6 “Blessed Lord, if bodhisattva great beings are endowed with the roots of such virtuous actions and they are not reborn in incomparably inferior places, [F.306.a] why did the Tathāgata disclose his own past lives in the animal realm? Where did those roots of virtuous action go on such occasions?”

67.7 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “bodhisattva great beings are not reborn in the animal realms due to nonvirtuous past actions, {Ki.VIII: 132} but for the sake of beings they voluntarily assume such corporeal forms by which they might be of benefit to beings. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings are endowed in that manner with skill in means whereby they may take birth in the animal realms, sacrifice themselves through their unsurpassed tolerance, even when some [creatures] come to kill them, and avoid harming those beings. Do śrāvakas or pratyekabuddhas have such skill in means? Therefore those, Subhūti, are the formulations explaining how bodhisattva great beings perfect great compassion for the sake of unsurpassed, complete enlightenment on behalf of beings, and, even though they are reborn in the animal realms, you should know that they are untainted by the defects of life in the animal realm.”

67.8 “Blessed Lord, maintaining which virtuous attributes do bodhisattva great beings acquire such corporeal forms?”

“Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “there are no virtuous attributes at all that bodhisattva great beings should not perfect. Unsurpassed, complete enlightenment is the perfection of all virtuous attributes. Therefore, there is no virtuous attribute at all that should not be perfected by bodhisattva great beings, commencing from when they first begin to set their mind on enlightenment, [F.306.b] until they are seated at the site of enlightenment. They do not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment while any virtuous attributes are unperfected. That would be impossible. So it is, Subhūti, that from the time when they first begin to set their mind on enlightenment, bodhisattva great beings should train in perfecting all virtuous attributes. When they have trained in it, they will attain all-aspect omniscience. They will also abandon all reincarnation through the continuity of propensities.”

67.9 “Blessed Lord, how are bodhisattva great beings who possess such positive attributes of sublime beings, free from contaminants, born in the inferior realms or in the animal realm?”

67.10 “Subhūti, are the tathāgatas sublime and without contaminants?” asked the Blessed One.

“Yes, Blessed Lord, it is so! Venerable Sugata, it is so! The tathāgatas are sublime and they are without contaminants.”

67.11 “Subhūti, can the tathāgatas conjure up a creature within the animal realm, and having conjured up that form, then engage in buddha activities?” asked the Blessed One.

“Yes, Blessed Lord, they may do so!”

67.12 “For that reason, Subhūti, do the tathāgatas become an animal?” asked the Blessed One. {Ki.VIII: 133}

“No, Blessed Lord!”

67.13 “Subhūti, do the tathāgatas [F.307.a] experience the suffering of the animal realm?” asked the Blessed One.

“No, Blessed Lord!”

67.14 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “even bodhisattva great beings who possess the uncontaminated attributes of sublime beings may voluntarily assume such corporeal forms by which they might bring beings of whatever species to maturity in whatever way. Subhūti, do you think that if an arhat were to conjure up an emanation, could that emanation undertake the activities of an arhat, giving rise through those activities to the joy of others?”<sup>562</sup>

“Yes, Blessed Lord, it is so!”

67.15 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “even bodhisattva great beings who possess the attributes of sublime beings, free from contaminants, may voluntarily assume such corporeal forms and bring beings of whatever species to maturity in whatever way, but through such corporeal forms they do not become subject to suffering and they do not experience even the sensation of suffering.

67.16 “Subhūti, do you think that if an illusionist through magic were to display the form of an elephant, the form of a horse, or the form of a bull—or were to display other diverse magical forms—would those really turn into the form of an elephant, the form of a horse, the form of an ox, or the form of another sort of living creature?”

“No, Blessed Lord!”

67.17 “Similarly, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “even bodhisattva great beings who possess the attributes of sublime beings, free from contamination, [F.307.b] may voluntarily assume such corporeal forms, and through these corporeal forms act on behalf of beings, but they have no sensation of suffering at all.”

67.18 Subhūti then said, “O Blessed Lord, most wonderful is this skill in means through which bodhisattva great beings possessing the uncontaminated wisdom of sublime beings assume such corporeal forms, by which they act on behalf of beings! Blessed Lord, in which pure attributes do bodhisattva great beings dwell when they employ such skill in means, but act without being tainted by such actions?”

67.19 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “bodhisattva great beings dwell in the perfection of wisdom [Ki.VIII: 134] when they employ such skill in means. Through that skill in means, they may act on behalf of beings in the world systems in each of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, but they do not hanker after anything at all. If you ask why, it is because bodhisattva great beings do not apprehend anything in terms of the threefold interaction that would cause hankering, by which they would hanker, or after which they would hanker. If you ask why, it is because all aspects of this threefold interaction are empty of inherent existence, and so emptiness does not hanker after emptiness. Emptiness does not hanker after anything at all, nor indeed can emptiness be hankered after. If you ask why, it is because emptiness does not apprehend emptiness. This, Subhūti, is the emptiness of nonapprehensibility. Abiding in it, bodhisattva great beings will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.” [F.308.a]

67.20 “Blessed Lord, why do bodhisattva great beings, without abiding in other attributes, dwell in the perfection of wisdom alone when they employ such skill in means?”

67.21 “Subhūti,” asked the Blessed One in return, “what attributes are there that are not included in the perfection of wisdom?”

“Blessed Lord, if the perfection of wisdom is empty of inherent existence, in what way are all phenomena gathered within the perfection of wisdom? Blessed Lord, there is nothing at all that is either included or not included in emptiness.”

67.22 “Subhūti, are all phenomena not empty of all phenomena?” asked the Blessed One.

“Yes, Blessed Lord, they are empty [of all phenomena].”

67.23 “Subhūti, if all phenomena are empty of all phenomena, are all phenomena not gathered within emptiness?” asked the Blessed One.

“Yes, they are, Blessed Lord.”

67.24 “For that reason, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “you should know that bodhisattva great beings dwell in the perfection of wisdom in that manner and employ such skill in means.”

67.25 Then the venerable Subhūti asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom and dwell in the emptiness of all phenomena, in what extrasensory powers are they certain to progress, and do they actualize the perfection of extrasensory powers through which they may travel to all world systems in each of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā; [F.308.b] venerate all those lord buddhas who are alive at present in those world systems, teaching the Dharma; listen to the Dharma; and develop the roots of virtuous actions in the presence of those lord buddhas?” {Ki.VIII: 135}

67.26 The Blessed One replied to the venerable Subhūti, “In this regard, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they see that all those world systems in each of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, are empty of inherent existence. They see that all the lord buddhas who reside in those world systems are also empty of inherent existence. In addition, these are [merely] described through names and symbols that depend on concepts, and apart from that, all concepts are also empty of inherent existence. If those world systems were not empty of inherent existence, if all those lord buddhas, too, were not empty of inherent existence, and if those concepts and ideas, too, were not empty of inherent existence, there would be [only] a limited emptiness. Indeed, it is because emptiness is not limited that all phenomena are empty of all phenomena. For this very reason, bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom through skill in means and actualize the perfection of extrasensory powers. Stable in those extrasensory powers, they actualize divine clairvoyance, divine clairaudience, the aspects of miraculous ability, the knowledge of other minds, the recollection of past lives, and knowledge of death and transmigration. Without these extrasensory powers, great bodhisattva [F.309.a] beings cannot attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. If you ask why, it is because the enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings is gathered in the perfection of the extrasensory powers. That is to say, enlightenment should be sought through those extrasensory powers.

67.27 “When they seek that [enlightenment] through pure divine clairvoyance, surpassing that of human beings, they themselves see all virtuous attributes, and they also engage others in all virtuous attributes, but they do not become fixated on those virtuous attributes. If you ask why, all those virtuous attributes are empty of inherent existence. One cannot be fixated on emptiness, relishing that on which one is fixated. Emptiness is not relished. When bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner they actualize divine clairvoyance. That is to say, through divine clairvoyance they see all phenomena as emptiness. Based on these phenomena, they engage in action, and, having engaged in action, they teach the Dharma to beings, but do not apprehend either beings or the concept of beings. Without apprehending anything in that manner, bodhisattva great beings actualize the perfection of the extrasensory powers. Through those extrasensory powers they effect all that is to be achieved through extrasensory powers. That is to say, through this pure divine clairvoyance itself, surpassing that of human beings, they see all world systems of the eastern direction. {Ki.VIII: 136} Traversing all these through miraculous ability, they act for the benefit of beings by means of generosity, ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, wisdom, [F.309.b] the factors conducive to enlightenment, the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the meditative stabilities, the serial steps of meditative absorption, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, the distinct qualities of the buddhas, the attributes of the śrāvakas, the attributes of the pratyekabuddhas, the attributes of the bodhisattvas, and the attributes of the buddhas. In that way they act on behalf of those beings.

67.28 “To all those beings who are miserly they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘You should give gifts! Deprivation is imbued with suffering. Through deprivation you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. So you should give gifts, and ensure that you yourself will be happy and that others too will be happy. Those oppressed by deprivation, consuming one another’s flesh, cannot be liberated from the three inferior realms.’

67.29 “To all those being beings who indulge in immorality, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, immorality is imbued with suffering. Through immorality you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of immorality is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, let alone others. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of immorality [F.310.a] [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!

67.30 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of malice for one another, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘You should not have thoughts of malice for one another! No virtuous attributes at all will arise for those who resort to anger. If you resort to anger for one another in that manner, you will be reborn in the hells, you will be reborn in the animal realm, or you will be reborn in the world of Yama. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of anger [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’

67.31 “To all those being beings who are indolent, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, indolence is imbued with suffering. Through indolence you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of indolence is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, let alone others. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of indolence [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’

67.32 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of distraction, {Ki.VIII: 137} they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, distraction is imbued with suffering. The ripening effect of distraction is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, let alone others. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of distraction [to arise] [F.310.b] and later you will not be remorseful!’

67.33 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of stupidity, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, stupidity is imbued with suffering. Through stupidity you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of stupidity is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of stupidity [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’

67.34 “They engage all those who act from desire in [the meditation on] the repulsiveness of things.<sup>563</sup> They engage all those who act from hatred in [the meditation on] loving kindness. They engage all those who act from delusion to engage in [the meditation on] dependent origination. They engage all those who have set out on negative paths to [engage in] the correct paths, engaging them in the path of the śrāvakas, the path of the pratyekabuddhas, or the path of the buddhas. To all of them, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘These phenomena on which you are fixated are empty of inherent existence. You cannot be fixated on phenomena that are empty of inherent existence. There is no fixation in emptiness.’

- 67.35 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they are stable in the extrasensory powers and act for the benefit of beings.
- 67.36 “Through pure divine clairvoyance itself, surpassing that of human beings, they see all world systems of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, as well as the nadir and the zenith. Traversing all these through miraculous ability, they act for the benefit of beings by means of generosity, [F.311.a] ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, wisdom, the factors conducive to enlightenment, the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the meditative stabilities, the serial steps of meditative absorption, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, the distinct qualities of the buddhas, the attributes of the śrāvakas, the attributes of the pratyekabuddhas, the attributes of the bodhisattvas, or the attributes of the buddhas. In that way they act on behalf of those beings.
- 67.37 “To all those beings who are miserly they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘You should give gifts! Deprivation is imbued with suffering. Through deprivation you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. So you should give gifts, and ensure that you yourself will be happy and that others too will be happy. Those who are oppressed by deprivation, consuming one another’s flesh, cannot be liberated from the three inferior realms.’
- 67.38 “To all those being beings who indulge in immorality, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, immorality is imbued with suffering. Through immorality you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of immorality is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, [F.311.b] let alone others. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of immorality [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’
- 67.39 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of malice for one another, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘You should not have thoughts of malice for one another! No virtuous attributes at all will arise for those who resort to anger. If you resort to anger for one another in that manner, you will be reborn in the hells, you will be reborn in the animal realm, or you will be reborn in the world of Yama. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of anger [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’

- 67.40 “To all those being beings who are indolent, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, indolence is imbued with suffering. Through indolence you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of indolence is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, let alone others. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of indolence [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’
- 67.41 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of distraction, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, distraction is imbued with suffering. The ripening effect of distraction is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. If you fall into the three inferior realms in that manner, you cannot extricate yourself, let alone others. [F.312.a] So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of distraction [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’
- 67.42 “To all those being beings who have thoughts of stupidity, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘O people, stupidity is imbued with suffering. Through stupidity you cannot achieve your own welfare, let alone the welfare of others. The ripening effect of stupidity is [rebirth in] the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama. So you should give no opportunity for any thoughts of stupidity [to arise] and later you will not be remorseful!’
- 67.43 “They engage all those who act through desire in [the meditation on] repulsive phenomena. They engage all those who act through hatred in [the meditation on] loving kindness. They engage all those who act through delusion to engage in [the meditation on] dependent origination. They engage all those who have set out on negative paths to [engage in] the correct paths, engaging them in the path of the śrāvakas, the path of the pratyekabuddhas, or the path of the buddhas. To all those, they teach the Dharma, saying, ‘These phenomena on which you are fixated are empty of inherent existence. You cannot be fixated on phenomena that are empty of inherent existence. There is no fixation in emptiness.’
- 67.44 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they are stable in the extrasensory powers and act for the benefit of beings.
- 67.45 “Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings cannot teach the Dharma to beings without being stable in the extrasensory powers. [F.312.b] They cannot induce beings who have set out on a mistaken path into [the correct] path.
- 67.46 “Subhūti, just as a bird without wings can never soar in the sky, in the same way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings cannot teach the Dharma to beings without relying on the extrasensory powers.

- 67.47 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they should actualize the extrasensory powers. Through those extrasensory powers that they have actualized they joyfully and happily undertake to perform any deeds of benefit to beings.
- 67.48 “Through divine clairvoyance they see all the world systems of the eastern direction, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, and they also see all the beings who are born in them. Having seen them in that manner, they travel there through miraculous abilities and, after comprehending the minds of those beings with their own minds, they will then teach the Dharma in conformity with them, through sermons on generosity; {Ki.VIII: 138} sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or through sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.
- 67.49 “Through divine clairvoyance they see all the world systems of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, as well as the nadir and the zenith, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, and they also see all the beings who are born in them. Having seen them in that manner, they travel there through miraculous abilities and, after comprehending the minds of those beings with their own minds, they will teach the Dharma in conformity with them, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; [F.313.a] or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.
- 67.50 “Through divine clairaudience they indeed hear the words of gods and of human beings. That is to say, with divine clairaudience they listen to the Dharma from all the lord buddhas who teach the Dharma in the world systems of the eastern direction, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, and having heard them, they retain them just as they are. Having retained them just as they are, they will then teach the Dharma to beings, just as it is, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.
- 67.51 “With divine clairaudience they listen to the Dharma from all those lord buddhas who teach the Dharma in the world systems of the southern, western, northern, northeastern, southeastern, southwestern, and northwestern directions, as well as the nadir and the zenith, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, and having heard them, they retain them just as they are. Having retained them just as they are, they will then teach the Dharma to beings, just as it is, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.

67.52 “They will have absolutely pure knowledge of the thought patterns [of others], and having known the minds of beings through that knowledge of their thought patterns, they will then teach them the Dharma, just as it is, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation. [F.313.b]

67.53 “They will recollect a multiplicity of past lives, of themselves and of others, and through the knowledge that recollects past lives, they will indeed know, ‘These were the names of the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas of the past. They appeared along with their saṅgha of śrāvakas.’ They will then teach the Dharma in an authentic manner to all those beings who are intent on the recollection of past lives, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.

67.54 “They will travel through miraculous abilities to all world systems of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, and venerate the lord buddhas. And, having venerated them, through the wisdom of their extrasensory powers they will then teach the Dharma to beings, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, up to and including sermons on emancipation.

67.55 “They will have absolutely pure knowledge of the state free from contaminants that is to be brought into being, and through that absolute knowledge of the state free from contaminants that is to be brought into being, they will then teach the Dharma to beings, through sermons on generosity; sermons on ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration; and wisdom; or sermons on the truths of the noble ones, {Ki.VIII: 139} up to and including sermons on emancipation.

67.56 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they should actualize the extrasensory powers. Those who are absolutely familiar with the extrasensory powers [F.314.a] may assume whatever corporeal form they wish to assume, and they then act according to their resolve for the benefit of beings. They will not be tainted by happiness or suffering. Subhūti, just as a man emanated by the tathāgatas carries out all objectives but will not be tainted by happiness or suffering, in the same way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings dwell in the perfection of wisdom, play with the extrasensory powers, and teach the Dharma in the world systems of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, in accordance with their resolve, but they will not be captivated by happiness or suffering.

67.57 “Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they should play with the extrasensory powers in that manner, so as to refine the buddhafi elds and brings beings to maturation by all means. Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings cannot attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment without having refined the buddhafi elds and without having brought beings to maturation. If you ask why, Subhūti, there is no unsurpassed, complete enlightenment for bodhisattva great beings who lack the aspects of the path.”

67.58 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, what are those aspects of the path that bodhisattva great beings should perfect, and through which they will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment?” [F.314.b]

“Subhūti, all virtuous attributes constitute the aspects of the path that bodhisattva great beings have,” replied the Blessed One.

67.59 “Blessed Lord, what then are those virtuous attributes, included among the aspects of the path, through which they will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment?” [B74]

The Blessed One replied, “From the time when they first begin to set their minds on enlightenment, virtuous attributes include the perfection of generosity when it is practiced, but without false imagination. That is to say, when dispensing gifts, on account of the emptiness of inherent existence, they do not think in terms of the threefold interaction, ‘This is a gift. It should be given to this one. I should give it.’ This perfection of generosity, through which they liberate themselves from cyclic existence and also liberate others, is a virtuous attribute included among the aspects of the path. {Ki.VIII: 140}

67.60 “From the time when they first begin to set their minds on enlightenment, virtuous attributes include the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom when they are practiced, but without false imagination. That is to say, when cultivating wisdom [and so forth], on account of the emptiness of inherent existence, they do not think in terms of the threefold interaction, ‘This is wisdom. I should cultivate wisdom. Wisdom should be cultivated with respect to that.’ This perfection of wisdom [and so forth], through which they liberate themselves from cyclic existence and also liberate others, is a virtuous attribute included among the aspects of the path.

67.61 “From the time when they first begin to set their minds on enlightenment, the virtuous attributes of bodhisattva great beings include all the aspects of emptiness, the factors conducive to enlightenment, [F.315.a] the four truths of the noble ones, the four meditative concentrations, the four immeasurable attitudes, the four formless absorptions, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas when they are practiced, but without false imagination. That is to say, when cultivating the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas [and so forth], on account of the emptiness of inherent existence, they do not think in terms of the threefold interaction, ‘These are the distinct qualities of the buddhas. I should cultivate the distinct qualities of the buddhas. The distinct qualities of the buddhas should be cultivated with respect to that.’ These distinct qualities of the buddhas [and so forth], through which they liberate themselves from cyclic existence and also liberate others, are virtuous attributes included among the aspects of the path.

67.62 “Subhūti, these virtuous attributes constitute the path of unsurpassed, complete enlightenment that bodhisattva great beings have. Through that path, bodhisattva great beings of the past, the future, and the present, steering with them immeasurable beings, have crossed beyond, are crossing beyond, and will cross beyond the ocean of cyclic existence. Having perfected that path, bodhisattva great beings attain all-aspect omniscience. Having attained all-aspect omniscience, they turn the wheel of the Dharma [F.315.b] and will turn the wheel of the Dharma, acting for the benefit of beings.”

CHAPTER 68

68.1 Then the venerable Subhūti asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, if these attributes are the attributes of a bodhisattva, what are the attributes of a buddha?”

68.2 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “you ask, ‘If these attributes are the attributes of a bodhisattva, what are the attributes of a buddha?’ Subhūti, the attributes of a buddha {Ki.VIII: 141} are the very same attributes once consummate buddhahood has been attained in all respects. They then attain all-aspect omniscience and abandon all the connecting propensities. With regard to this [distinction], bodhisattva great beings will attain consummate buddhahood. The tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas have attained consummate buddhahood with respect to all phenomena through the wisdom of a single instant, for which reason they are styled tathāgatas. That is the distinction between bodhisattva great beings and the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas.

68.3 “Subhūti, just as those entering [the fruits] are of one type and those established in the fruits are of another type, and yet these two types are not said to denote ‘unholy individuals,’ in the same way, Subhūti, bodhisattva great beings are those entering the unimpeded path and the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas are those who have acquired wisdom that is unobscured with respect to all phenomena. [F.316.a] That, Subhūti, is the distinction between bodhisattva great beings and the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas.”

68.4 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, if all phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics, how can one make distinctions and differentiate between these phenomena that are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics, saying, ‘This is a denizen of the hells. This one belongs to the animal realm. This one is a being of the world of Yama. This one is a god. This one is a human being. This one is on the level of the spiritual family. This one is on the eighth-lowest level. This one has entered the stream to nirvāṇa. This one is destined for only one more rebirth. This one is no longer subject to rebirth. This one is an arhat. This one is a pratyekabuddha. This one is a bodhisattva. This one is a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha.’ Blessed Lord, just as individual persons cannot be apprehended, in the same way their karma also cannot be apprehended. Just as their karma cannot be apprehended, in the same way the maturation of their karma also cannot be apprehended.”

68.5 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” replied the Blessed One. “It is as you have said. No karma or maturation of karma can be apprehended with respect to all phenomena that are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics. On the other hand, Subhūti, those who do not know that all phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics do condition karma, whether based on negative conduct or positive conduct, or whether it is neutral. Through karma based on negative conduct they regress into the three inferior realms. Through karma based on positive conduct they are born as gods and as human beings. [F.316.b] Through karma that is without degeneration, they are born in the realm of form or the realm of formlessness.

68.6 “In this regard, bodhisattva great beings develop the path of enlightenment through conduct that is without degeneration while practicing the perfection of generosity; while practicing the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom; while practicing the emptiness of internal phenomena; {Ki.VIII: 142} while practicing [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity; while practicing the applications of mindfulness; while practicing the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path; while practicing the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways; and while practicing the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas. They then become absorbed in the vajra-like meditative stability, attended by the retinue of the branches of enlightenment, and they attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Having attained consummate buddhahood, they act for the benefit of beings. Having acted for their benefit, they in no way neglect them in the future. [F.317.a] Acting in that manner they do not regress into cyclic existence with its five classes of living beings."

68.7 "Blessed Lord, does the Blessed Lord see cyclic existence with its five classes of living beings, having attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment?"

"No, Subhūti," replied the Blessed One.

68.8 "Blessed Lord, do the tathāgatas apprehend phenomena that are negative, phenomena that are positive, phenomena that may be negative or positive, and phenomena that are neither negative nor positive?"

"No, Subhūti," replied the Blessed One.

68.9 "Blessed Lord, if these are not apprehended, how do beings conceive of the hells, the animal realm, or the world of Yama? How do they conceive of gods and human beings? How do they conceive of individuals entering the stream to nirvāṇa, individuals destined for only one more rebirth, individuals no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, and pratyekabuddhas? How do they conceive of bodhisattvas and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas?"

68.10 "Subhūti, do these beings know that phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics?" asked the Blessed One.

"No, they do not!"

68.11 "Subhūti," continued the Blessed One, "if those beings knew that phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics, bodhisattva great beings would indeed not set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. If they did not set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, [F.317.b] they would not liberate beings from the three inferior realms and from the other classes of beings within cyclic existence. Subhūti, it is because {Ki.VIII: 143} beings do not know that phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics that they are not liberated from cyclic existence with its five classes of beings. For this reason, bodhisattva great beings hear from those lord buddhas that all phenomena are empty of intrinsic defining characteristics, and set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment for the sake of beings. These phenomena do not exist in the manner in which ordinary, simple persons are fixated on them. So it is that they imagine nonexistent and inauthentic phenomena to exist, and they perceive nonexistent beings as beings. They perceive nonexistent physical forms as physical forms. They perceive nonexistent feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness as consciousness [and so forth]. They perceive nonexistent sense fields as sense fields. They perceive nonexistent sensory elements as sensory elements. They perceive nonexistent links of dependent origination as links of dependent origination. They perceive nonexistent mundane phenomena as mundane phenomena. They perceive nonexistent supramundane phenomena as supramundane phenomena. They perceive nonexistent contaminated phenomena as contaminated phenomena. They perceive nonexistent uncontaminated phenomena as uncontaminated phenomena. They perceive nonexistent conditioned phenomena as conditioned phenomena, and they perceive nonexistent unconditioned phenomena as unconditioned phenomena. With minds that are mistaken due to misconception concerning nonexistents, [F.318.a] they effect the conditioning of body, speech, and mind. Since these persons are not liberated from cyclic existence with its five classes of beings, bodhisattva great beings engage in the conduct of a bodhisattva, integrating all virtuous attributes in the perfection of wisdom, and they will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Having attained consummate buddhahood, they will then liberate beings from cyclic existence with its five classes of beings.”

68.13 “In this regard, Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “having attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, bodhisattva great beings teach to beings the [nature of] suffering, the origin of suffering, the cessation of suffering, and the path that leads to the cessation of suffering, explaining, determining, establishing, interpreting, commenting upon, elucidating, and correctly describing these [four truths of the noble ones]. In these four truths of the noble ones are included all the virtuous attributes and factors conducive to enlightenment through which the Three Precious Jewels are established. That is to say, through the appearance in the world of the precious jewel of the Buddha, the precious jewel of the Dharma, and the precious jewel of the Saṅgha, beings are liberated from cyclic existence with its five classes of beings.” [F.318.b]

68.14 “Blessed Lord, do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of suffering or do they pass into final nirvāṇa through suffering? Do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the origin of suffering or do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the origin of suffering? {Ki.VIII: 144} Do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the cessation of suffering or do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the cessation of suffering? Do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the path or do they pass into final nirvāṇa through the path?”

- 68.15      “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “they do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of suffering, nor do they through suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the origin of suffering, nor do they through the origin of suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the cessation of suffering, nor do they through the cessation of suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the path, nor do they through the path. Subhūti, I have said that the sameness of these four truths of the noble ones is nirvāṇa. That is to say, they do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of suffering, nor do they through suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the origin of suffering, nor do they through the origin of suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the cessation of suffering, nor do they through the cessation of suffering. They do not pass into final nirvāṇa through the cognition of the path, nor do they through the path.”
- 68.16      “Blessed Lord, what then is the sameness of the four truths of the noble ones, [F.319.a] in which there is neither suffering nor the cognition of suffering, neither the origin of suffering nor the cognition of the origin of suffering, neither the cessation of suffering nor the cognition of the cessation of suffering, and neither the path nor the cognition of the path?”
- 68.17      “That is the real nature of these four truths of the noble ones,” replied the Blessed One. “It is their unmistakable real nature, their one and only real nature, their reality, the realm of phenomena, the abiding nature of reality, the maturity of all phenomena, and the very limit of reality. Whether the tathātagas have appeared or whether the tathāgatas have not appeared, the expanse that dwells in that manner—the realm of phenomena—is present without degeneration and without diminution. Therefore, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom in that manner, they act so that the truths might be understood in the way that the truths should be understood.”
- 68.18      Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, how do they practice so as to realize the truths? When they practice, how do they realize and know the truths, so that, having comprehended them, they do not regress into the level of the śrāvakas or the level of the pratyekabuddhas, but set out for the maturation of the bodhisattvas?”
- 68.19      “In this regard, Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they see these phenomena without apprehending anything at all. By not apprehending anything, {Ki.VIII: 145} [F.319.b] they see that all phenomena are empty, whether they are included in the truths or not included in the truths. Seeing in that manner, bodhisattva great beings who embark on the maturation [of the bodhisattvas] will be established on the level of the spiritual family, and when those bodhisattvas have been established on the level of the spiritual family, they will not fall from the summit. That is to say, they will not fall from the summit, regressing into the level of the śrāvakas or the level of the pratyekabuddhas. Abiding on the level of the spiritual family of which bodhisattvas partake, they achieve the four meditative concentrations, and they achieve the four immeasurable attitudes and the four formless absorptions. By seeing in that manner, they dwell in them and cognize all phenomena. They understand the four truths. Although they comprehend suffering, they do not produce thoughts that have suffering as their objective referent. Although they have renounced the origin of suffering, they do not produce thoughts that have the origin of suffering as their objective referent. Although they actualize the cessation of suffering, they do not produce thoughts that have the cessation of suffering as their objective referent. Although they cultivate the path, they do not produce thoughts that have the path as their objective referent. Rather, they see all phenomena definitively, just as they are, with a mind that is inclined toward enlightenment.”

68.20 “Blessed Lord, what is the definitive nature of all phenomena, just as they are?”

“It is emptiness,” replied the Blessed One.

68.21 “Blessed Lord, what is emptiness?”

“The emptiness of intrinsic defining characteristics,” replied the Blessed One. “Through such higher insight, they see that all phenomena are empty. That is to say, they do not see inherent existence in anything at all, on which they might settle or through which they might attain consummate buddhahood in enlightenment. [F.320.a] Indeed, enlightenment is a nonentity. It has not been created by the buddhas. It has not been created by pratyekabuddhas. Nor has it been created by arhats, those no longer subject to rebirth, those destined for only one more rebirth, or those entering the stream to nirvāṇa. This enlightenment has not been created even by bodhisattva great beings who practice it. On the contrary, it is because beings do not know and do not see [phenomena] definitively that bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom and teach the Dharma to beings through skill in means.”

CHAPTER 69

69.1 Then the venerable Subhūti asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, if all phenomena are nonentities—that is to say, if they have not been created by the buddhas, have not been created by pratyekabuddhas, have not been created by arhats, or by individuals no longer subject to rebirth, individuals destined for only one more rebirth, individuals who have entered the stream to nirvāṇa, or by those who would enter into those [fruits], and if this enlightenment has not even been created by bodhisattva great beings who practice it—how, with respect to all phenomena, could one differentiate and establish, ‘These are denizens of the hells. These belong to the animal realm. These belong to the world of Yama. These are gods. These are human beings. Through this karma they will become denizens of the hells, animals, or the world of Yama. Through this karma they will become gods of the Caturmahārājakāyika realm, and through this karma they will become gods of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, [F.320.b] Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmaṇapurohita, Brahmaṇapariṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāsubha, Apramāṇāsubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha. Through this karma they will become gods of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception. Through this karma they will become an individual entering the stream to nirvāṇa, an individual destined for only one more rebirth, an individual no longer subject to rebirth, an arhat, or a pratyekabuddha. Through this karma they will become a bodhisattva great being. Through this karma they will become a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha’?”

69.2 “Blessed Lord, nonentities are without any actions at all through which they could reach the hells; reach the animal realm; reach the world of Yama; be born as a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa; be born as a god of Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmmapurohita, Brahmapariṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāśubha, [F.321.a] Apramāṇāśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception; attain the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa; attain the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, or individual enlightenment; practice the path of bodhisattva great beings; or attain all-aspect omniscience and, having attained that, liberate beings from cyclic existence.”

The Blessed One replied to the venerable Subhūti as follows: “Subhūti, it is so! It is so. It is as you have said. Subhūti, nonentities are without any action to perform and without any fruit. However, ordinary, simple people who are ignorant of the sublime doctrine do not know that phenomena have the essential nature of nonentity. Through thoughts that have arisen from misconception, they condition diverse actions, so that they actualize the sort of corporeal form that accords with them, whether in the hells, the animal realm, the world of Yama, or the human realm; or among the gods of Caturmahārājakāyika; or among the gods of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, [F.321.b] Brahmakāyika, Brahmmapurohita, Brahmapariṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇāśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; {Ki.VIII: 159} or among the gods of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception. Nonentities are without any action to perform and without any fruit. That which is a nonentity is itself without entity.

“In this regard, Subhūti, you also said that nonentities are without any actions through which they could reach the hells; reach the animal realm; reach the world of Yama; be born as a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmmapurohita, Brahmapariṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇāśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, [F.322.a] the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception; attain the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa; attain the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, or individual enlightenment; practice the path of bodhisattva great beings; or attain all-aspect omniscience and, having attained that, liberate beings from cyclic existence.

69.5 “Subhūti, do you think that the path is not a nonentity, that the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa is not a nonentity, that the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, and individual enlightenment are not nonentities, or that [the goals], up to and including all-aspect omniscience, are not nonentities?”

69.6 “Blessed Lord, the path is a nonentity. The fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa is a nonentity. The fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, and individual enlightenment are nonentities. [The goals], up to and including all-aspect omniscience, are nonentities.”

69.7 “Subhūti, do you think that a nonentity can effect the attainment of a nonentity?” asked the Blessed One.

“No, Blessed Lord!”

69.8 “So it is, Subhūti, that phenomena that are nonentities and phenomena that constitute the path are neither conjoined nor disjoined, [F.322.b] and they are immaterial, unrevealed, and unimpeded, their sole defining characteristic being that they are without defining characteristics.

69.9 “In this regard, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, through skill in means they liberate from [belief in] entities [and so forth] those who are fixated through the four misconceptions concerning the five aggregates—those who perceive the impermanent as permanent, those who perceive suffering as happiness, those who perceive nonself as self, those who perceive the unpleasant as pleasant—and those who are fixated on entities.”

69.10 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, is there an entity that is said to be the real nature or the unmistakable real nature, such as that to which ordinary, simple people become attached and fixated? If there were not, how do they condition the deeds on account of which they are in the meantime not liberated from cyclic existence with its five classes of beings?”

69.11 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “apart from erroneous views, there has been established no entity, even as tiny as a fraction of a hair-tip, on which ordinary, simple people settle and condition deeds. {Ki.VIII: 160} For this reason, Subhūti, I will explain an analogy to you so that the wise might understand this point clearly and perfectly. Subhūti, do you think that when one sees something in a dream, there is some entity seen in that dream on which one may settle and which one might enjoy through the five desirable attributes of the senses?"

69.12 "Blessed Lord, since the dream itself does not exist, whatever is seen in that dream, whatever could be known, would be nonexistent, let alone anything on which one might settle and that one might enjoy through the five desirable attributes of the senses!" [F.323.a]

69.13 "Subhūti, do you think that there exists anything at all, mundane, supramundane, contaminated, uncontaminated, conditioned, or unconditioned, that does not resemble a dream?" asked the Blessed One.

"No, Blessed Lord! There exists nothing at all, mundane, supramundane, contaminated, uncontaminated, conditioned, or unconditioned, that does not resemble a dream."

69.14 "Does cyclic existence with its five classes of beings exist in a dream?" asked the Blessed One.

"No, Blessed Lord."

69.15 The Blessed One then asked, "Subhūti, do you think that dreams are endowed with the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?"

"No, Blessed Lord; they are nonentities, Blessed Lord. They cannot be conceived through any expressions, sounds, words, or letters."

69.16 "Subhūti," continued the Blessed One, "do you think that when a reflection appears on a mirror, there exists some entity that would condition deeds, and by the conditioning [of deeds] proceed to the hells, proceed to the animal realm, proceed to the world of Yama, or become a human being or a god?"

69.17 "No, Blessed Lord. That would be a nonentity, except, Blessed Lord, in the case of simpletons who are being deceived. [F.323.b] Since the reflection itself does not exist, whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone any deeds that it might condition, and by which they would proceed to the hells, proceed to the animal realm, proceed to the world of Yama, or become a human being or a god."

69.18 "Subhūti," continued the Blessed One, "do you think that [this reflection] would be endowed with the cultivation of the path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?"

"No, Blessed Lord. Since the reflection itself is not an entity, Blessed Lord, {Ki.VIII: 161} whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified!"

69.19 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that when an echo emerges from a dense forest, a mountain, a precipice, or a valley, that echo would have an entity that would condition [deeds] through which one would proceed to the hells, proceed to the animal realm, proceed to the world of Yama, or become a human being or a god?”

69.20 “No, Blessed Lord. Since the echo itself is not an entity, whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone any deeds that it would condition, on the basis of which one would proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; become a god or a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, [F.324.a] Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception.”

69.21 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that that echo would be endowed with the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?”

“No, Blessed Lord. Since the echo itself absolutely does not exist, Blessed Lord, whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified.”

69.22 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that in a mirage when water is perceived where there is no water, where rivers are perceived where there are no rivers, where cities are perceived where there are no cities, and where meadows are perceived where there are no meadows, this mode of perception would condition [deeds], through which one might proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; [F.324.b] become a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception?”

69.23 “Blessed Lord, since in a mirage water, rivers, cities, and meadows absolutely do not exist, except for erroneous perception and the mistaken vision of the eyes, whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone any deeds through the conditioning of which one might proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; become a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmānarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāsubha, Apramāṇāsubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, [F.325.a] Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception.”

69.24 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that erroneous perception [of the mirage] would be endowed with the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?” {Ki.VIII: 162}

“No, Blessed Lord. Since that erroneous perception [of the mirage] is itself a nonentity, whatever could be known would be nonexistent, let alone the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified.”

69.25 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that when an illusionist conjures up diverse magical displays—herds of elephants, herds of horses, herds of oxen, divisions of infantry, the form of a woman, or the form of a man—these magical displays would condition [deeds] through which one might proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; become a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmānarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, [F.325.b] Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāsubha, Apramāṇāsubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception?”

69.26 “No, Blessed Lord! Based on these magical displays there exists nothing at all, not even as tiny as the fraction of a hair-tip, that would condition deeds through which one might proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; be born as a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmānarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception.” [F.326.a]

69.27 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that magical displays would be endowed with the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?”

“No, Blessed Lord. How, Blessed Lord, could there possibly be affliction or purification in the case of phenomena that are nonentities!”

69.28 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that when the tathāgatas create a phantom emanation, that phantom emanation would condition any deeds through which one might proceed to the hells; proceed to the animal realm; proceed to the world of Yama; be born as a human being; be born as a god of Caturmahārājakāyika; be born as a god of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmaṇiṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, or Akaniṣṭha; or be born as a god of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, or the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception?”

69.29 “No, Blessed Lord. [F.326.b] There would be no entity in that phantom emanation.”

69.30 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that this phantom emanation would be endowed with the cultivation of a path through which one would be neither afflicted nor purified?”

“No, Blessed Lord!” {Ki.VIII:163}

69.31 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that there would exist anyone defiled or purified in it?”

“No, Blessed Lord, there would not!”

69.32 The Blessed One then said, “Subhūti, just as there is no one at all that is defiled or purified, in the same way there exists neither affliction nor purification. If you ask why, abiding in notions of ‘I’ and ‘mine,’ beings become defiled or purified, but those who see authentically will neither be afflicted nor purified. Just as for those who see authentically there will neither be affliction nor purification, in the same way there exists neither affliction nor purification.”

69.33 This completes the sixty-ninth chapter from “The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 70

70.1 The venerable Subhūti then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, just as those who see authentically are neither afflicted nor purified, in the same way, those who do not<sup>565</sup> see authentically also are neither afflicted nor purified. Since all phenomena have the essential nature of nonentity, [F.327.a] Blessed Lord, in nonentities there is neither affliction nor purification, and, Blessed Lord, in their essential nature there is neither affliction nor purification. If in the essential nature of nonentity there is indeed neither affliction nor purification, what is that which the Blessed Lord has described as purification?”

70.2 “Blessed Lord, what is the sameness of all phenomena?”

The Blessed One replied, “It is the real nature, the unmistakable real nature, the one and only real nature, reality, the realm of phenomena, the abiding nature of reality, the maturity of all phenomena, and the very limit of reality. Subhūti, whether the tathāgatas have appeared or whether the tathāgatas have not appeared, purification is that which is said to be the abiding nature of phenomena, the expanse that dwells in that manner, the realm of phenomena. Although it is expressed in mundane conventional terms, it is inexpressible and ineffable, transcending the paths of language and words.”

70.3 “Blessed Lord, if all phenomena are like a dream, like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation, how do bodhisattva great beings, with respect to all phenomena that are nonentities and insubstantial, like a dream, like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation, [F.327.b] themselves set their minds on unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, so as to perfect the perfection of generosity? How should they perfect the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of wisdom, the perfection of skill in means, the perfection of aspiration, the perfection of power, and the perfection of gnosis?<sup>566</sup> How should they perfect the emptiness of internal phenomena? How should they perfect the emptiness of external phenomena, the emptiness of external and internal phenomena, and [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity? How should they perfect the applications of mindfulness? How should they perfect the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path? How should they perfect the four truths of the noble ones, the four meditative concentrations, the four immeasurable attitudes, the four formless absorptions, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the five extrasensory powers, all the meditative stabilities, and all the dhāraṇī gateways? How should they perfect the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas? How should they perfect the thirty-two major marks of a great person and how should they perfect the eighty excellent minor marks? [F.328.a] How should they perfect a great aureole of light? How should they perfect the voice of Brahmā through which they can teach the Dharma with a single sound to the beings of the world systems of the ten directions in accordance with their resolve, having comprehended with their minds the thoughts in the minds of those beings?"

70.4 "Subhūti," asked the Blessed One in return, "do you think that these phenomena that you have mentioned are like a dream, like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation?"

70.5 "Blessed Lord, if these phenomena are like a dream, like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation, {Ki.VIII: 165} how do bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom? Blessed Lord, dreams are not real. Echoes, optical aberrations, mirages, magical displays, and phantom emanations are not real. Blessed Lord, because phenomena are not real, they cannot attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, having practiced the perfection of generosity; having practiced the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom; having practiced the emptiness of internal phenomena; having practiced [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity; and having practiced the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment, the four truths of the noble ones, [F.328.b] the four meditative concentrations, the four immeasurable attitudes, the four formless absorptions, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.”

70.6 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” replied the Blessed One. “Because phenomena are not real, bodhisattva great beings cannot attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, having practiced the perfection of generosity; having practiced the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom; having practiced the emptiness of internal phenomena; having practiced [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity; having practiced the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment; having practiced the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and all the dhāraṇī gateways; and having practiced the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas. [F.329.a]

70.7 “Subhūti, do you think that the perfection of generosity will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment?”

“No, Blessed Lord!”

70.8 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “do you think that the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment? Will all the aspects of emptiness and the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment? Will the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment? Will the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment?”

“No, Blessed Lord!” [F.329.b] [B75]

70.9 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” continued the Blessed One. “The perfection of generosity will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The emptiness of internal phenomena will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. [The other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The applications of mindfulness will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways [F.330.a] will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. The powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas will not attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.

70.10 “Subhūti, if you ask why, it is because all these attributes are indeed conditioned and brought into being. All-aspect omniscience cannot be attained by attributes that are conditioned and brought into being. Subhūti, although these attributes all attain the path and contribute to it, they do not lead to the attainment of the fruit. The nonarising and nonorigination of these attributes indeed denotes their absence of defining characteristics. Therefore, bodhisattva great beings, from the time when they begin to set their minds on enlightenment, know that all these virtuous attributes that they undertake are like a magical display, whether they be the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of wisdom, the emptiness of internal phenomena, [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment, the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the eight aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, [F.330.b] the meditative stabilities, the dhāraṇī gateways, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, or the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas. {Ki.VIII:166}

70.11 “Beings cannot be brought to maturation or attain all-aspect omniscience without their having perfected the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of wisdom, the emptiness of internal phenomena, [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, the applications of mindfulness, the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, the noble eightfold path, the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, the dhāraṇī gateways, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas. [F.331.a] So it is for this reason that bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom and they know that whichever virtuous attributes they undertake are like a dream. They know they that these are like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation.

70.12 “When they practice the perfection of wisdom, they know that the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of wisdom, the emptiness of internal phenomena, [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, the applications of mindfulness, the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, the noble eightfold path, the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, the dhāraṇī gateways, the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas, and [the goals], up to and including all-aspect omniscience, are like a dream. They know they that these are like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation. They know that all beings are acting in a dream, [F.331.b] and acting in [the manner of] an echo, an optical aberration, a mirage, a magical display, and a phantom emanation. Therefore, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, {Ki.VIII: 167} they hold dreamlike attributes to be nonentities, and holding them as such, they do attain all-aspect omniscience. When bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they hold attributes that are like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation to be nonentities, and holding them as such, they do attain all-aspect omniscience.

70.13      “The perfection of wisdom cannot be grasped. The perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of ethical discipline, and the perfection of generosity cannot be grasped. The emptiness of internal phenomena cannot be grasped. [The other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, cannot be grasped. The applications of mindfulness, the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path cannot be grasped. The truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways cannot be grasped. The powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, [F.332.a] the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas cannot be grasped. Therefore, bodhisattva great beings, knowing that all attributes cannot be grasped, strive toward unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. If you ask why, it is because all phenomena are ungraspable nonentities, like a dream, like an echo, like an optical aberration, like a mirage, like a magical display, and like a phantom emanation. An ungraspable phenomenon cannot attain anything that is ungraspable, except in the case of beings who do not know, see, or understand these attributes. This is why bodhisattva great beings set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment for the sake of all beings. From the time when they first begin to set their minds on enlightenment, whatever gifts they dispense, they dispense them for the sake of all beings. Whatever ethical discipline they maintain, whatever tolerance they cultivate, whatever [acts of] perseverance they undertake, whatever meditative concentration they are absorbed in, and whatever wisdom they cultivate, they do so for the sake of all beings, and not for their own sake.

70.14 “Bodhisattva great beings do not set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment except for the sake of beings. {Ki.VIII: 168} When they practice the perfection of wisdom, they liberate from erroneous views those harboring the notion of beings where there are no beings, harboring the notion of self where there is no self, harboring the notion of life forms where there are no life forms, harboring the notion of living beings where there are no living beings, harboring the notion of life where there is no life, [F.332.b] harboring the notion of living creatures where there are no living creatures, harboring the notion of individual personalities where there are no individual personalities, harboring the notion of human beings where there are no human beings, harboring the notion of people where there are no people, harboring the notion of actors where there are no actors, harboring the notion of agents where there are no agents, harboring the notion of petitioners where there are no petitioners, harboring the notion of instigators of petitions where there are no instigators of petitions, harboring the notion of experiencers where there are no experiencers, harboring the notion of instigators of experience where there are no instigators of experience, harboring the notion of knowers where there are no knowers, and harboring the notion of viewers where there are no viewers. After liberating them from these erroneous views, they establish them in the deathless expanse. Having established them in that, those habitual notions no longer proliferate. That is to say, the notion of self, the notion of beings, the notion of life forms, the notion of living beings, the notion of life, the notion of living creatures, the notion of individual personalities, the notion of human beings, the notion of persons, the notion of actors, the notion of agents, the notion of petitioners, the notion of instigators of petitions, the notion of experiencers, the notion of instigators of experience, the notion of knowers, or the notion of viewers no longer proliferates. [F.333.a] Having abandoned these restless conceits and burning conceptual elaborations, they approach with a mind free from conceptual elaboration, and achieve much. For this reason, Subhūti, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they themselves are not fixated on anything at all, and they also establish all beings in nonfixation. This they do by way of mundane convention, not ultimate reality.”

70.15 “Blessed Lord, regarding this attainment of consummate buddhahood by the tathāgatas, is consummate buddhahood attained by way of mundane convention or, otherwise, by way of ultimate reality?”

“It is in mundane conventional terms that one speaks of ‘this attainment of consummate buddhahood by the tathāgatas,’ ” replied the Blessed One. “But nothing at all is apprehended when one says, ‘This is the attainment of consummate buddhahood by that.’ If you ask why, there is [dualistic] apprehending when one says, 'This is the attainment of consummate buddhahood by that,' but nothing at all is attained or clearly realized through duality."

70.16 "Blessed Lord, if nothing is attained or clearly realized through duality, is there any attainment or clear realization through nonduality?"

"There is neither attainment nor clear realization through duality, nor is there any attainment or clear realization through nonduality," replied the Blessed One. "Attainment and clear realization occur where there is neither duality nor nonduality. [F.333.b] If you ask why, it is because the expression, 'This is attainment. This is clear realization,' is a conceptual elaboration, and in the sameness of phenomena there is no conceptual elaboration. {Ki.VIII: 169} The absence of conceptual elaboration is the sameness of phenomena."

70.17 "Blessed Lord, how are phenomena that have the nature of nonentity not entities if it is said that all phenomena have the nature of sameness?"

"The sameness of phenomena denotes that which is neither an entity, nor a nonentity, without inherent existence and without affirmation," replied the Blessed One. "The sameness of phenomena cannot be expressed. Apart from the sameness of phenomena, there is nothing at all that can be apprehended. The sameness of phenomena has transcended everything. The sameness of phenomena is not an object that can be known by anyone at all—ordinary people or sublime beings."

70.18 "Blessed Lord, is the sameness of phenomena not even an object for the tathāgatas?"

"The sameness of phenomena is not an object for any tathāgata," replied the Blessed One. "It is not an object for those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, or tathāgatas."

70.19 "Blessed Lord, do the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas not have mastery over of all phenomenal objects?"

"Subhūti," replied the Blessed One, "if the sameness of phenomena were one distinct thing and the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas another, [F.334.a] then the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas would indeed have control over all phenomenal objects. However, Subhūti, the sameness of phenomena with respect to ordinary people and the sameness of phenomena with respect to those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas is an identical sameness. There is no distinction at all between sameness and nonsameness. So, the sameness of ordinary people and the sameness of all sublime beings is an identical sameness. In this identical sameness, there is no duality that would enable you to say, 'This is an ordinary person. This one is entering the stream to nirvāṇa. This one is destined for only one more rebirth. This one is no longer subject to rebirth. This one is an arhat. This one is a pratyekabuddha. This one is a bodhisattva. This one is a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha.’ Such conceptual thoughts are not apprehended in sameness.” {Ki.VIII: 170}

70.20 “Blessed Lord, if in the sameness of all phenomena there is no apprehending of the conceptual thoughts enabling one to say, ‘This is an ordinary person. This one is entering the stream to nirvāṇa. These ones are destined for only one more rebirth, no longer subject to rebirth, an arhat, a pratyekabuddha, and a bodhisattva. This one is a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha,’ in that case there would be no distinction between ordinary people, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, [F.334.b] those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas.”

70.21 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” replied the Blessed One. “In the sameness of all phenomena there is no distinction between ordinary people, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas.”

70.22 “Blessed Lord, if in the sameness of all phenomena there is no distinction between ordinary people, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas, why, Blessed Lord, do the Three Precious Jewels—the precious jewel of the Buddha, the precious jewel of the Dharma, and the precious jewel of the Saṅgha—emerge in the world?”

70.23 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “do you think that the precious jewel of the Buddha is one thing, the precious jewel of the Dharma another, the precious jewel of the Saṅgha another, and the sameness of phenomena [F.335.a] yet another?”

70.24 “Blessed Lord, as I understand the meaning of the words spoken by the Blessed One, the precious jewel of the Buddha is not one thing, the precious jewel of the Dharma not another, the precious jewel of the Saṅgha not another, and the sameness of phenomena not yet another. Rather, the precious jewel of the Buddha, the precious jewel of the Dharma, and the precious jewel of the Saṅgha are themselves the sameness of phenomena. All these attributes are neither conjoined nor disjoined, and they are immaterial, invisible, and unimpeded, with a single defining characteristic, in that they are without defining characteristics. In that case, since all phenomena are without defining characteristics, how is it within the perceptual range of the Blessed One to establish, ‘This is an ordinary person. This one is entering the stream to nirvāṇa. These ones are destined for only one more rebirth, {Ki.VIII: 171} no longer subject to rebirth, an arhat, a pratyekabuddha, and a bodhisattva. This one is a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha?’”

70.25 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” replied the Blessed One. “The establishing of phenomena without defining characteristics is within the perceptual range of the tathāgatas. That is within the power of the tathāgatas. Subhūti, do you think that if the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas were not to establish all phenomena in order that consummate buddhahood in enlightenment might be attained, the hells would be clearly discerned? [F.335.b] Would the animal realm, the world of Yama, and human beings be clearly discerned? Would the gods of Caturmahārājakāyika be clearly discerned? Would the gods of Trayastriṃśa, Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, Paranirmitavaśavartin, Brahmakāyika, Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariśadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttāśubha, Apramāṇāśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, [Parīttabṛhat], Apramāṇabṛhat, Bṛhatphala, Avṛha, Atapa, Sudṛśa, Sudarśana, and Akaniṣṭha be clearly discerned? Would the gods of the sphere of infinite space, the sphere of infinite consciousness, the sphere of nothing-at-all, and the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception be clearly discerned?”

70.26 “Would the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom be clearly discerned? Would the ten levels of the bodhisattvas be clearly discerned? Would the emptiness of internal phenomena be clearly discerned? Would [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, be clearly discerned? Would the applications of mindfulness, the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path be clearly discerned? Would the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, [F.336.a] the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways be clearly discerned? Would the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the distinct qualities of the buddhas be clearly discerned? Would the thirty-two major marks of a great person and the eighty excellent minor marks be clearly discerned? Would the precious jewel of the Buddha, the precious jewel of the Dharma, and the precious jewel of the Saṅgha be clearly discerned? Would the vehicle of the śrāvakas, the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and the Great Vehicle be clearly discerned? Would followers on account of faith, followers of the Dharma, and those on the eighth level be clearly discerned? Would those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas be clearly discerned?”

70.27 “Therefore, Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, {Ki.VIII: 172} “it is within the power of the tathāgatas to establish all these attributes without stirring from the sameness of all phenomena.”

70.28 “Blessed Lord, just as the tathāgatas do not stir from the sameness of phenomena, in the same way is it the case that ordinary persons, too, do not stir from the sameness of phenomena? Similarly, is it the case that followers on account of faith, followers of the Dharma, those of the eighth level, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, [F.336.b] those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas, too, do not stir from the sameness of phenomena?”

70.29 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” replied the Blessed One. “Subhūti, nothing stirs from the sameness of phenomena. Nothing transcends the sameness of phenomena. If you ask why, Subhūti, it is because the real nature of the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas—their unmistaken real nature, one and only real nature, reality, realm of phenomena, abiding nature of reality, maturity with respect to all phenomena, and very limit of reality—is also the real nature of ordinary persons—their unmistaken real nature, one and only real nature, reality, realm of phenomena, abiding nature of reality, maturity with respect to all phenomena, and very limit of reality. It is also the real nature of followers on account of faith, followers of the Dharma, those of the eighth level, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas—their unmistaken real nature, one and only real nature, reality, realm of phenomena, abiding nature of reality, maturity with respect to all phenomena, and very limit of reality. All these indicate the sameness of phenomena. Nothing transcends it. If you ask why, [F.337.a] it just is their reality, realm of phenomena, abiding nature of reality, maturity with respect to all phenomena, real nature, unmistaken real nature, one and only real nature, and very limit of reality. There is nothing else apart from these that would be called the sameness of phenomena.”

70.30 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, if the sameness of phenomena that ordinary people have is itself the sameness of phenomena that followers on account of faith have, and that followers of the Dharma, those of the eighth level, those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas have, and if it is itself the sameness of phenomena that tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas have, in that case, Blessed Lord, how would all those phenomena with dissimilar defining characteristics—including physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, the sense fields, the sensory elements, the links of dependent origination, desire, hatred, delusion, all the aspects of wrong view, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, the perfection of wisdom, the perfection of skill in means, [F.337.b] the perfection of aspiration, the perfection of power, the perfection of gnosis, the ten levels of the bodhisattvas, the applications of mindfulness, the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, the noble eightfold path, the truths of the noble ones, the gateways of liberation—emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness—the emptiness of internal phenomena, [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, the five extrasensory powers, all the meditative stabilities, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas, the thirty-two major marks of a great person, the eighty excellent minor marks, conditioned elements, and unconditioned elements—indeed, Blessed Lord, have unique defining characteristics that are different from one another?

70.31 “Blessed Lord, if one were to ask why, it is because if the reality of physical forms were one distinct thing, and the reality of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness another; the reality of the sense fields, {Ki.VIII: 173} the sensory elements, and the links of dependent origination another; the reality of attachment another; the reality of hatred another; [F.338.a] the reality of delusion another; the reality of the aspects of wrong view another; the reality of the perfection of generosity another; the reality of the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom another; the reality of the emptiness of internal phenomena another; the reality of [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, another; the reality of the applications of mindfulness another; the reality of the correct exertions, the supports for miraculous ability, the faculties, the powers, the branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path another; the reality of the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and all the dhāraṇī gateways another; {Ki.VIII: 174} the reality of the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the distinct qualities of the buddhas another; the reality of the thirty-two major marks of a great person and the eighty excellent minor marks another; and the reality of conditioned elements and unconditioned elements another, in that case, Blessed Lord, how would the reality of phenomena with dissimilar defining characteristics [F.338.b] be of a single defining characteristic? How would all those phenomena be established?

70.32 “When bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, in what have they been established when they differentiate among phenomena? If bodhisattva great beings indeed cannot practice the perfection of wisdom without differentiating among phenomena, how, when practicing the perfection of wisdom, do they progress from level to level, and enter into the maturity [of the bodhisattvas]? How, having entered into the maturity of the bodhisattvas, do they transcend the levels of the śrāvakas and the pratyekabuddhas? How do they perfect the extrasensory powers? How do they display the extrasensory powers, and perfect the perfection of generosity, the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom? How, displaying these [extrasensory powers], do they travel from buddhafiield to buddhafiield? How do they venerate the lord buddhas, and develop the roots of virtuous action in their presence? How do they bring beings to maturation through those roots of virtuous action and acquire the buddhafiields?”

70.33 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “you asked: if the sameness of phenomena that all phenomena have is itself the sameness of phenomena that ordinary people have, and is itself the sameness of phenomena that followers on account of faith, followers of the Dharma, those of the eighth level, [F.339.a] those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattva great beings, and the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas have, in that case, Blessed Lord, how would the sameness of phenomena with dissimilar defining characteristics be unique? Subhūti, do you think that the reality of physical forms is itself not emptiness? {Ki.VIII: 175} Is the reality of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the sense fields, the sensory elements, and the links of dependent origination itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the perfection of generosity itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the emptiness of internal phenomena itself not emptiness? Is the reality of [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity, itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the factors conducive to enlightenment itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, [F.339.b] wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the distinct qualities of the buddhas itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa itself not emptiness? Is the reality of the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, individual enlightenment, and [the goals], up to and including all-aspect omniscience, itself not emptiness? Is the reality of those entering the stream to nirvāṇa, those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas itself not emptiness?"

"Blessed Lord, it is emptiness!"

70.34 "In that case," continued the Blessed One, "in emptiness can anything with different defining characteristics be apprehended, such as the defining characteristics of physical forms; the defining characteristics of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness; the defining characteristics of the sense fields, the sensory elements, and the links of dependent origination; the defining characteristics of the perfection of generosity; the defining characteristics of the perfection of ethical discipline, the perfection of tolerance, the perfection of perseverance, the perfection of meditative concentration, and the perfection of wisdom; the defining characteristics of the emptiness of internal phenomena; the defining characteristics of [the other aspects of emptiness], up to and including the emptiness of the essential nature of nonentity; the defining characteristics of the factors conducive to enlightenment; the defining characteristics of the truths of the noble ones, the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, the formless absorptions, [F.340.a] the aspects of liberation, the serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, the extrasensory powers, the meditative stabilities, and the dhāraṇī gateways; the defining characteristics of the powers of the tathāgatas, the fearlessnesses, the kinds of exact knowledge, great compassion, and the distinct qualities of the buddhas; the defining characteristics of the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa; the defining characteristics of the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, individual enlightenment, and [the goals], up to and including all-aspect omniscience; the defining characteristics of those entering the stream to nirvāṇa; or the defining characteristics of those destined for only one more rebirth, those no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, bodhisattvas, and tathāgatas?”

70.35 “Therefore, Subhūti, one should know for this very reason that in the reality of all phenomena there are no ordinary persons, nor anyone other than ordinary persons. In it there are no followers on account of faith, nor anyone other than followers on account of faith. In it there are no followers of the Dharma, nor anyone other than followers of the Dharma. In it there is no one on the eighth level, nor anyone other than those of the eighth level. In it there is no one entering the stream to nirvāṇa, nor anyone other than those entering the stream to nirvāṇa. In it there is no one destined for only one more rebirth, nor anyone other than those destined for only one more rebirth. In it there is no one no longer subject to rebirth, nor anyone other than those no longer subject to rebirth. In it there are no arhats, nor anyone other than arhats. In it there are no pratyekabuddhas, nor anyone other than pratyekabuddhas. In it there are no bodhisattvas, nor anyone other than bodhisattvas. [F.340.b] In it there are no tathāgatas, nor anyone other than tathāgatas.” {Ki.VIII: 176}

70.36 “Blessed Lord, is that reality conditioned, or is it unconditioned?”

“It is neither conditioned nor unconditioned,” replied the Blessed One. “That is to say, the unconditioned cannot be apprehended apart from the conditioned, and the conditioned cannot be apprehended apart from the unconditioned. Therefore, Subhūti, both conditioned elements and unconditioned elements are neither conjoined nor disjoined, and they are immaterial, invisible, and unimpeded, with a single defining characteristic, in that they are without defining characteristics. This the tathāgatas say in mundane conventional terms, but not by way of ultimate reality. For, in ultimate reality, there are no formative predispositions of body, formative predispositions of speech, or formative predispositions of mind. Nor is ultimate reality apprehended as anything other than formative predispositions of body, formative predispositions of speech, or formative predispositions of mind. Yet, the sameness of conditioned and unconditioned phenomena is ultimate reality. For this reason, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they do not stir from ultimate reality but they also practice the conduct of a bodhisattva.”

70.37 This completes the seventieth chapter from “The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines.”

71.

CHAPTER 71: THE TEACHING ON THE UNCHANGING TRUE NATURE

71.1

Then the venerable Subhūti asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, the sameness of all phenomena is empty of inherent existence—there is nothing at all that does anything to anything. Since all phenomena do nothing whatsoever and are nothing whatsoever, how is it that, when bodhisattva great beings practice the perfection of wisdom, they do not stir from ultimate truth [F.341.a] but still act for the sake of all beings through [the attractive qualities of] generosity, pleasant speech, purposeful activity, and harmony?”

“Subhūti, it is so! It is just as you have said,” replied the Blessed One. “Emptiness does not do anything to anything at all, nor does it not do anything to anything at all. If beings themselves knew emptiness, there would not be [a need for] the power of the tathāgatas’ leadership, whereby without stirring from emptiness they separate all beings from the notion of self, and having separated them from the notion of self, liberate them from cyclic existence through emptiness; or separate them from the notion of beings, the notion of life forms, the notion of living beings, the notion of life, the notion of living creatures, the notion of individual personalities, the notion of human beings, the notion of people, the notion of actors, the notion of petitioners, the notion of experiencers, the notion of knowers, and the notion of viewers, and having separated them from the notion of viewers [and so forth], liberate them from cyclic existence through emptiness; or separate them from the notion of physical forms, and having separated them from the notion of physical forms, liberate them from cyclic existence through emptiness; {Ki.VIII: 177} or separate them from the notion of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and having separated them from the notion of consciousness [and so forth], liberate them from cyclic existence through emptiness; or separate them from the notion of the sense fields, the sensory elements, and the links of dependent origination, and having separated them from the notion of the links of dependent origination [and so forth], liberate them from cyclic existence through emptiness; or separate them from the notion of conditioned elements, and having separated them from the notion of conditioned elements, establish them in the unconditioned expanse, which is also empty.”

- 71.3 “Blessed Lord, of what is that [unconditioned expanse] empty?” [F.341.b] “It is empty of all notions,” replied the Blessed One. “Subhūti, if someone were to conjure up a phantom emanation,<sup>567</sup> would there be any entity in it, which is not emptiness?”
- 71.4 “No, Blessed Lord! There would be no entity at all in that phantom emanation that would not be emptiness. {Ki.VIII: 178} Both emptiness and the phantom emanation are neither conjoined nor disjoined. Indeed, both are empty owing to emptiness. If this is the case, why is this point concealed when it is said, ‘This is emptiness. That is a phantom emanation’? If one were to ask why, it is because neither emptiness nor the phantom emanation is apprehended in emptiness.”
- 71.5 “Subhūti,” continued the Blessed One, “there is nothing in physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, or consciousness that is not a phantom emanation, and any phantom emanation is empty.”
- 71.6 “Blessed Lord, if mundane phenomena are phantom emanations, are supramundane phenomena—the four applications of mindfulness, the four correct exertions, the four supports for miraculous ability, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven branches of enlightenment, the noble eightfold path, the three gateways of liberation, the four truths of the noble ones, all the aspects of emptiness, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, all the meditative stabilities, all the dhāraṇī gateways, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas, and [F.342.a] their fruits through which individual persons are established as entering the stream to nirvāṇa, being destined for only one more rebirth, being no longer subject to rebirth, arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas—not also similar to a phantom emanation?”
- 71.7 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “all phenomena are phantom emanations. Some are emanated by śrāvakas. Some are emanated by pratyekabuddhas. Some are emanated by bodhisattvas. Some are emanated by tathāgatas. Some are emanated by afflicted mental states. Some are emanated by past actions. For this reason, Subhūti, all phenomena are phantom emanations.”

- 71.8 “Blessed Lord, are the attributes of ‘abandonment,’ which are associated with the fruit of entering the stream to nirvāṇa, the fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth, the fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth, arhatship, the level of the pratyekabuddhas, the level of the buddhas, and the abandonment of all the connecting propensities, also phantom emanations?”
- “Subhūti, all phenomena whatsoever that have arisen or ceased are phantom emanations,” replied the Blessed One.
- 71.9 “Blessed Lord, what is not a phantom emanation?”
- “That which is without arising or ceasing is not a phantom emanation,” replied the Blessed One. {Ki.VIII: 179}
- 71.10 “What is that?”
- “Peerless nirvāṇa—that is not a phantom emanation,” replied the Blessed One.
- 71.11 “The Blessed One has said, ‘There is no stirring at all from emptiness, nor is duality apprehended. There is nothing at all that is not emptiness.’ Therefore, Blessed Lord, peerless nirvāṇa is also a phantom emanation.”
- 71.12 “Subhūti, it is so! It is so,” [F.342.b] replied the Blessed One. “Subhūti, all phenomena are empty. They have not been created by the śrāvakas. They have not been created by the pratyekabuddhas. They have not been created by bodhisattva great beings. They have not been created by tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas. The emptiness of inherent existence is nirvāṇa.”
- 71.13 Subhūti then asked, “Blessed Lord, how should an individual who is a beginner be instructed and advised, so as to understand the emptiness of inherent existence?”
- 71.14 “Subhūti,” replied the Blessed One, “has there been an entity in the past that will become a nonentity in the future? In this regard, Subhūti, since there is no entity, no nonentity, no inherent existence, and no extraneous entity, how could there possibly be something called the emptiness of inherent existence that they should comprehend!”

CHAPTER 72: THE DIVISIONS OF A BODHISATTVA'S TRAINING

Then the bodhisattva great being Maitreya asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord,<sup>568</sup> how should bodhisattva great beings who seek to practice the perfection of wisdom, and train in the trainings of the bodhisattvas, {Ki.VIII: 146} train with regard to physical forms? How should they train with regard to feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness? How should they train with regard to the sense field of the eyes, the sense field of the ears, the sense field of the nose, the sense field of the tongue, the sense field of the body, and the sense field of the mental faculty? How should they train with regard to the sense field of sights, the sense field of sounds, the sense field of odors, the sense field of tastes, the sense field of touch, and [F.343.a] the sense field of mental phenomena? How should they train with regard to the sensory element of the eyes, the sensory element of sights, the sensory element of visual consciousness, the sensory element of the ears, the sensory element of sounds, the sensory element of auditory consciousness, the sensory element of the nose, the sensory element of odors, the sensory element of olfactory consciousness, the sensory element of the tongue, the sensory element of tastes, the sensory element of gustatory consciousness, the sensory element of the body, the sensory element of touch, the sensory element of tactile consciousness, the sensory element of the mental faculty, the sensory element of mental phenomena, and the sensory element of mental consciousness? How should they train with regard to the sense field of visually compounded sensory contact and the sense fields of aurally, nasally, lingually, corporeally, and mentally compounded sensory contact? How should they train with regard to ignorance? How should they train with regard to formative predispositions, consciousness, name and form, the six sense fields, sensory contact, sensation, craving, grasping, the rebirth process, actual birth, and aging and death? How should they train with regard to the truth of suffering? How should they train with regard to the truth of the origin of suffering, the truth of cessation, and the truth of the path? How should they train with regard to material phenomena? How should they train with regard to phenomena that are immaterial, visible, invisible, impeded, unimpeded, conditioned, unconditioned, contaminated, uncontaminated, inadmissible, admissible, revealed, unrevealed, positive, negative, internal, external, seen, heard, known, cognized, past, future, present, virtuous, nonvirtuous, specific, indeterminate, included [and not included] in the realm of desire, included [and not included] in the realm of form, [F.343.b] included and not included in the realm of formlessness, associated with [the paths of] learning, no more learning, and neither learning nor no more learning, and associated with desire, anger, pride, ignorance, wrong view, and hesitation? How should they train with regard to phenomena that are generous, miserly, ethical, unethical, tolerant, malicious, persevering, indolent, concentrated, distracted, wise, and stupid? How should they train with regard to emptiness and conceptual thought, signlessness and signs, wishlessness and false aspirations, nonvirtuous phenomena, impermanence, suffering, and nonself? How should they train with regard to afflicted mental states, the abandoning of afflicted mental states, affliction, purification, cyclic existence, nirvāṇa, enlightenment, and the qualities of the buddhas?"

72.2 The Blessed One then replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, "Maitreya, bodhisattva great beings who seek to practice the perfection of wisdom and train in the training of a bodhisattva should train [in the view] that physical forms are merely names. They should train [in the view] that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness are merely names, and that [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are merely names." {Ki.VIII: 147}

72.3 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, "Blessed Lord, when this name physical forms is apprehended as having a [corresponding] entity; when the names feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness are apprehended as having [corresponding] entities; and when the names [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are [F.344.a] apprehended as having [corresponding] entities—that is to say, when these are apprehended as having [corresponding] entities owing to this or that sign consisting in conditioning—how could bodhisattva great beings train [in the view] that physical forms are merely names; that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness are merely names; and that [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are merely names? Since these names would lack a [corresponding] entity, one could not use<sup>569</sup> a mere name such as physical forms at all. One could not use the mere names feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and one could not use the mere names of all these [aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas.”<sup>570</sup>

72.4 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, the name physical forms is adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning. [Similarly,] the names feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness are adventitiously imputed, and the names [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are also adventitiously imputed.”

72.5 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One,<sup>571</sup> “Blessed Lord, since there is therefore a conviction, understanding, and recognition of the name physical forms as an entity called physical forms whose signs consist of conditioning—that is to say, since there is conviction, understanding, and recognition that the name physical forms does indeed refer to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning—how then is the name physical forms adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning?”

72.6 “Blessed Lord, since there is a conviction, understanding, and recognition of the name feelings, and the names perceptions, [F.344.b] formative predispositions, and consciousness, as entities whose signs consist of conditioning, and, Blessed Lord, since there is a conviction, understanding, and recognition of the names [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, as entities whose signs consist of conditioning—that is to say, since there is conviction, understanding, and recognition that the names feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions and consciousness, and the names [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, do indeed refer to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning—how then are the names feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness. and how are the names [of the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning?”

72.7 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “For this I will ask you a question, and you may answer as best you can. Maitreya, do you think that the name physical forms refers to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning, without taking as a basis, depending on, or settling on this or that entity whose signs consist of a conditioning that derives from the name itself, such as physical forms?”

“No, Blessed Lord!”

- 72.8 “Maitreya, do you think the name feelings, and the names perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and, Maitreya, do you think that the names [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, refer to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning, without taking as a basis, depending on, or settling on this or that entity whose signs consist of a conditioning that derives from those names, such as the qualities of the buddhas and so forth?” [F.345.a]
- “No, Blessed Lord!”
- 72.9 “Maitreya, you should know that according to this discourse the designation physical forms, and the designations feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, are adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning. The designations [of the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning.
- 72.10 “Maitreya, do you think that through diverse names, symbols, conventions, and imputations, one engages in, conventionally expresses, conceives of, and becomes fixated on this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning?”
- “Yes, Blessed Lord!”
- 72.11 “Maitreya, you should know that, according to this discourse, the designation physical forms, the designations feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and the designations [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning.
- 72.12 “In this regard, are there some who would harbor notions of self and other, and conceive of, name, express conventionally, or become fixated on those entities whose signs consist of conditioning?”
- “Yes, Blessed Lord!”
- 72.13 “Maitreya, you should know that, according to this discourse, the designation physical forms, the designations feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and the designations [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning.”
- 72.14 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, {Ki.VIII: 148} “Blessed Lord, if this is so, [F.345.b] would an entity whose signs consist of conditioning not be apprehended as the inherent existence of physical forms [and so forth], and dependent on that would notions, conceptions, and conventional designations of physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and of [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, not be apprehended?”

72.15 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, the expression physical forms is a name, an imputation, and a conventional term applied to entities whose signs consist of conditioning. Do you think that they have an essential nature or inherent existence, or else are they merely imputed?”

72.16 “Well then, Maitreya, how do you think that there could be any apprehending of the inherent existence of physical forms? Maitreya, the expressions feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and the expression [of all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are names, imputations, and conventional terms applied to entities whose signs consist of conditioning. Do you think that they have an essential nature or inherent existence, or else are feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, merely imputed?”

72.17 “Well then, Maitreya, how do you think that there could be any apprehending of the inherent existence of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and of [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas?”

72.18 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, if physical forms are merely names, notions, symbols, imputations, and conventional expressions, and, Blessed Lord, if feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, [F.346.a] are merely names, notions, symbols, imputations, and conventional expressions—if that is so, would there not be apprehending of the inherent existence of physical forms? If that is so, would there not be apprehending of the inherent existence of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, and of [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, which are all merely names, notions, symbols, imputations, and conventional expressions?”

72.19 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, do you think that physical forms are merely names, notions, symbols, imputations, and conventional expressions, or else do they arise and perish, or are they afflicted and purified?”

- 72.20 “Well then, Maitreya, how do you think that the inherent existence of physical forms could be [apprehended]?<sup>572</sup>
- 72.21 “Maitreya, do you think that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, {Ki.VIII: 149} and consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are merely names, notions, symbols, imputations and conventional expressions, or else do they arise and perish, or are they afflicted and purified?”
- “No, Blessed Lord, they are not and do not!”
- 72.22 “Well then, Maitreya, how do you think that the inherent existence of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and of [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, could be [apprehended]?”
- 72.23 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, do physical forms not exist in all their aspects and in all their defining characteristics? Blessed Lord, do feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, [F.346.b] and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, not exist in all their aspects and in all their defining characteristics?”
- 72.24 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, I do not say that physical forms do not exist in all their aspects and in all their defining characteristics. Maitreya, I do not say that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, do not exist in all their aspects and in all their defining characteristics.”
- 72.25 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, how then do physical forms exist? How do feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, exist?”
- 72.26 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, physical forms exist in terms of mundane symbols and conventional expressions, but not in ultimate reality. Maitreya, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, exist in terms of mundane symbols and conventional expressions, but not in ultimate reality.”
- 72.27 The bodhisattva Maitreya then said to the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, as I understand the meaning of the words spoken by the Blessed One, this expanse [of reality] is inexpressible in ultimate reality. Blessed Lord, if the expanse is inexpressible in ultimate reality, how then, Blessed Lord, [from the perspective of ultimate reality,] is the designation physical forms adventitiously imputed to entities whose signs consist of conditioning? How are the designations feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, [F.347.a] and [all the aforementioned phenomena], up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, adventitiously imputed to entities whose signs consist of conditioning? Since these [entities] do not exist in ultimate reality, how are entities whose signs consist of conditioning [equated with] the inexpressible [reality]? Rather, it is illogical that they should be identified with the inexpressible expanse [of reality].”

72.28 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, for this I will ask you a question, and you may answer as best you can. Maitreya, do you think that whenever you engage with wisdom in the inexpressible expanse, you apprehend any entity whose signs consist of conditioning to which the designations physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, should be adventitiously imputed?” {Ki.VIII: 150}

72.29 “Maitreya,” continued the Blessed One, “as this discourse explains, you should know that those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning are not the inexpressible expanse, but also that the inexpressible expanse is not anything other than those [posited] entities to which the designations physical forms, and feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed. Maitreya, if [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning were the inexpressible expanse, even all ordinary, simple persons would pass into nirvāṇa or attain buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Maitreya, if the inexpressible expanse were not other than those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning, any sign in relation to that inexpressible expanse that is to be comprehended would be nonapprehensible. [F.347.b] Maitreya, for this reason, also, you should know that those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning are not the inexpressible expanse, and the inexpressible expanse is not anything other than those [posited] entities to which the designations physical forms, and feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed.”

72.30 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, when bodhisattvas dwell in the perfection of wisdom in association with the inexpressible expanse, if they do not apprehend any [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning to which the designations physical forms, and feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed, in that case, Blessed Lord, is it an existent or a nonexistent that they would not apprehend?"

72.31 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, "Maitreya, those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning are without any independent existence or nonexistence at all. If you ask why, Maitreya, when you conceptualize those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning, are those [posited] entities whose signs consist of conditioning not grasped by way of conceptualization? When you dwell in the practice of wisdom in association with the inexpressible expanse, and are without conceptual thoughts, are they then not grasped by way of nonconceptualization?"

"They are not, Blessed Lord!"<sup>573</sup>

72.32 "Maitreya, if they were, would any [posited] entities, whose signs consist of conditioning to which the designations physical forms, and feelings, perceptions, [F.348.a] formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are adventitiously imputed, not merely be conceptualizations? {Ki.VIII: 151} And even if they are mere conceptualizations, if you seek to conceptualize while abiding in the nonconceptual expanse, what could be apprehended as an existent [or nonexistent] to which the designations physical forms, and feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, [might be adventitiously imputed]?"

72.33 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, "Blessed Lord, in how many ways should bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom and maintain the skill that distinguishes phenomena understand the conceptual subdivision of physical forms? In how many ways should they understand the conceptual subdivision of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas?"

72.34 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, "Maitreya, bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom and maintain the skill that distinguishes phenomena should understand the conceptual subdivision of physical forms in three ways. They should understand the conceptual subdivision of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, in three ways. That is to say, [they should understand in this way] 'these are imagined physical forms, these are conceptualized physical forms, these are real physical forms; these are imagined feelings, these are conceptualized feelings, these are real feelings; these are imagined perceptions, these are conceptualized perceptions, these [F.348.b] are real perceptions; these are imagined formative predispositions, these are conceptualized formative predispositions, these are real formative predispositions; this is imagined consciousness, this is conceptualized consciousness, this is real consciousness,' and so on, up to and including 'these are imagined qualities of the buddhas, these are conceptualized qualities of the buddhas, and these are real qualities of the buddhas.' "

72.35 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, "Blessed Lord, what are imagined physical forms, what are conceptualized physical forms, and what are real physical forms? Blessed Lord, what are imagined, [conceptualized, and real] feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness [and so forth]? Blessed Lord, what are imagined qualities of the buddhas? What are conceptualized qualities of the buddhas? What are real qualities of the buddhas?"

72.36 "Maitreya, imagined physical forms are those that have been imagined in accordance with the [false] inherent existence of physical forms, dependent on the name, notion, [imputation,] and conventional expression physical forms, and with respect to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning. {Ki.VIII: 152} Maitreya, imagined feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, [F.349.a] and so on, up to and including [imagined] qualities of the buddhas, are those that have been imagined in accordance with the [false] inherent existence of feelings and the [false] inherent existence of perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, and so on, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, dependent on the names, notions, imputations, and conventional expressions feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, and with respect to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning.

72.37 "Conceptualized physical forms, conceptualized feelings, conceptualized perceptions, conceptualized formative predispositions, conceptualized consciousness and so forth, up to and including conceptualized qualities of the buddhas, are those nominal, notional, imputed, and conventionally expressed physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, that have been verbalized dependent on conceptualizations that are merely posited as reality, and with respect to this or that entity whose signs consist of conditioning.

72.38 " 'Real physical forms, and real feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas,' denote reality and the expanse of the abiding nature of reality, whether the tathāgatas have appeared or whether the tathāgatas have not appeared. This abiding nature is the absence of inherent existence, nonself, real nature, and very limit of reality, eternal through all eternity, and constant through all time, of those [aforementioned] conceptualized physical forms [and so forth], and owing to those [aforementioned] imagined physical forms [and so forth].”

72.39 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, among those three aspects of physical forms, which physical forms are regarded as insubstantial, which are substantial, and which are neither substantial nor insubstantial, as distinguished in accordance with ultimate reality? Blessed Lord, among those three aspects of feelings, three aspects of perceptions, three aspects of formative predispositions, three aspects of consciousness, [F.349.b] and so forth, up to and including the three aspects of the qualities of the buddhas, which qualities of the buddhas [and so forth] are regarded as insubstantial, which are substantial, and which are neither insubstantial nor substantial, as distinguished in accordance with ultimate reality?”

72.40 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, physical forms that are imagined are regarded as insubstantial. Physical forms that are conceptualized are regarded as substantial because conceptualization is substantial, although they lack independent existence. Physical forms that are real are regarded as neither insubstantial nor substantial, as distinguished in accordance with ultimate reality. Feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness that are imagined, and so forth, up to and including qualities of the buddhas that are imagined, are regarded as insubstantial. {Ki.VIII: 153} Feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness that are conceptualized, and so forth, up to and including qualities of the buddhas that are conceptualized, are regarded as substantial because conceptualization is substantial, although they lack independent existence. Feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness that are real, and so forth, up to and including qualities of the buddhas that are real, are regarded as neither insubstantial nor substantial, as distinguished in accordance with ultimate reality.”

72.41 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, when the Blessed One distinguishes physical forms and distinguishes feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, reckoning that physical forms are without duality, and reckoning that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, [F.350.a] are without duality, what did the Blessed One intend when

- he taught, reckoning that physical forms are without duality and reckoning that feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, are without duality?"
- 72.42 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, "Maitreya, do you think that with respect to imagined physical forms, that insubstantiality is material or else is it not material?"
- "Blessed Lord, it is not [material]!"
- 72.43 "Are these 'nominal, notional, imputed, and conventionally expressed physical forms' material?"
- "Blessed Lord, they are not!"
- 72.44 "For this reason, Maitreya, you should indeed know that imagined physical forms are neither material nor immaterial. That which is neither material nor immaterial is without duality. It is with this intention that I have said that these 'physical forms' are reckoned to be without duality.
- 72.45 "Maitreya, do you think that anything nominal, notional, imputed, and conventionally expressed, dependent on those conceptualized physical forms that are substantially existing, is material?"
- "No, Blessed Lord, it is not!"
- 72.46 "Maitreya, do you think that with regard to these same conceptualized physical forms, the lack of inherent existence of imagined physical forms and their lack of defining characteristics [F.350.b] is material?" {Ki.VIII: 154}
- "No, Blessed Lord, it is not!"
- 72.47 "Maitreya, as this discourse also explains, you should know that those conceptualized physical forms, also, are neither material nor immaterial. That which is neither material nor immaterial is indeed without duality. It is with this intention that I have said that these 'physical forms' are reckoned to be without duality.
- 72.48 "Maitreya, do you think that those physical forms that are real and distinguished as nonself of physical forms are material?"
- "No, Blessed Lord, they are not!"
- 72.49 "Is the reality of physical forms, with respect to those physical forms that are real, material?"
- "No, Blessed Lord, it is not!"
- 72.50 "Maitreya, as this discourse also explains, you should know that those real physical forms, also, are neither material nor immaterial. That which is neither material nor immaterial is indeed without duality. It is with this intention that I have said that these 'physical forms' are reckoned to be without duality.

72.52 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, how should bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom, who are skilled in that manner in the nondual defining characteristics of physical forms, who have abandoned the two extremes, and who have embarked on the path of the middle way regard the comprehension of defining characteristics? How should they [regard] the abandoning of defining characteristics? How should they [regard] the actualizing of defining characteristics? [F.351.a] How should they [regard] the cultivating of defining characteristics?”

72.53 The Blessed One replied to the bodhisattva Maitreya, “Maitreya, for bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom, who have abandoned the two extremes, and who have embarked on the path of the middle way, their comprehension with respect to these physical forms is just that there is neither comprehension nor noncomprehension. Similarly, their comprehension with respect to those feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, is just that there is neither comprehension nor noncomprehension. {Ki.VIII: 155} Their exertion with respect to these physical forms is just that there is neither exertion nor nonexertion. Similarly, their exertion with respect to those feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness, and so forth, up to and including the attributes of the buddhas, is just that there is neither exertion nor nonexertion. Their actualization with respect to the abandoning of those physical forms is just that there is neither actualization nor nonactualization. Their cultivation with respect to the abandoning of those physical forms is just that there is neither cultivation nor noncultivation of the path.

72.55 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, what is the nirvāṇa of bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom and are endowed with such comprehension, abandoning, actualization, and cultivation?”

“Maitreya, [F.351.b] the nirvāṇa of the bodhisattvas is profound, very profound,” replied the Blessed One to the bodhisattva Maitreya.

72.56 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, why is the nirvāṇa of the bodhisattvas profound, very profound?”

“Maitreya,” replied the Blessed One, “the nirvāṇa of the bodhisattvas is that which is neither nirvāṇa, nor not nirvāṇa. That is why it is profound, very profound.”

72.57 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, in what way is the nirvāṇa of the bodhisattvas neither nirvāṇa, nor not nirvāṇa?”

72.58 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, taking into account the benefit of others, if bodhisattvas do not forsake cyclic existence, how through the nonforsaking of cyclic existence do they not also forsake nirvāṇa? Blessed Lord, taking into account their own benefit, if bodhisattvas do not forsake nirvāṇa, how do they not also forsake cyclic existence?”

72.59 “In this regard, Maitreya,” replied the Blessed One, “when bodhisattvas practice the perfection of wisdom, they do not conceptualize cyclic existence as cyclic existence, and they do not conceptualize nirvāṇa as nirvāṇa. [F.352.a] When they do not conceptualize in that manner, cyclic existence and nirvāṇa both become the same. {Ki.VIII: 156} If you ask why, it is because when they do not conceptualize cyclic existence as cyclic existence, they do not become distressed in cyclic existence while they are in nirvāṇa. When they do not conceptualize nirvāṇa as nirvāṇa, they do not become attached to nirvāṇa while they are in cyclic existence. Therefore, you should know that for this reason, while established in the nonconceptual expanse, there is neither the forsaking of cyclic existence nor nonforsaking of nirvāṇa.”

72.60 The bodhisattva Maitreya then said to the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, just as bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom and are established in the nonconceptual expanse have not forsaken cyclic existence, they have indeed not appropriated it. Just as they have not forsaken nirvāṇa, they have indeed not appropriated that. Blessed Lord, if these have not been appropriated, how do they become something that has not been forsaken?”

72.61 “Maitreya,” replied the Blessed One, “I do not speak of the appropriation or nonappropriation of cyclic existence, but, Maitreya, I do say that bodhisattvas who practice the perfection of wisdom and have mastered their minds through the wisdom that has as its object the nonconceptual expanse, and bodhisattvas who have attained final nirvāṇa, do not forsake cyclic existence because they manifest in cyclic existence through skill in means, in all world systems of the ten directions, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā. I also say that they do not forsake nirvāṇa because they dwell in nonapprehensible emptiness.”

“Maitreya,” replied the Blessed One, “through the nonduality of nonentities and entities,<sup>574</sup> the absence of conceptual elaboration with respect to all phenomena and aspects of emptiness—that is to say, physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, consciousness and so forth, up to and including the qualities of the buddhas, along with the emptiness of physical forms and so forth, up to and including the emptiness of the qualities of the buddhas—Maitreya, the defining characteristics of all these phenomena should be regarded in that manner.”

72.63 The bodhisattva Maitreya then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, will all the śrāvakas be established in partial or complete nirvāṇa?”

“No, Maitreya!” replied the Blessed One. “If you ask why, Maitreya, the beings of these realms are of varied dispositions and manifold dispositions. Among the beings of these realms with their varied dispositions and manifold dispositions there are beings of many sorts of heritage and nature. Maitreya, there are some among the classes and categories of beings {Ki.VIII: 157} who from the beginning seek noble distinctions and who attain such noble distinctions, and there are some among the classes and categories of beings who from the beginning seek inferior distinctions and who will attain such inferior distinctions and rejoice in that. There are also some among the classes and categories [of beings] who initially seek and attain inferior distinctions, but, having attained them, do not rejoice in merely that, and then later go on to seek higher, noble distinctions and attain such noble distinctions.”

72.64 The bodhisattva Maitreya then said to the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, if that third class and category of beings, after attaining arhatship, [F.353.a] should seek to attain unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, in that case, the Blessed One has prophesied that rebirth would be impossible for them. If rebirth is impossible, how will they attain [enlightenment]?”

“Maitreya,” replied the Blessed One, “I do not proclaim that they will acquire a rebirth under the sway of past actions and afflicted mental states, but I do proclaim that they will acquire the rebirth [of an arhat], attaining inconceivable nirvāṇa.”

72.65 The bodhisattva Maitreya then said to the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, how wonderful it is that bodhisattva great beings who have magnanimous intentions and most powerful exalted aspirations seek noble distinctions from the very beginning and will attain such noble distinctions. Blessed Lord, what are these magnanimous intentions of bodhisattva great beings?”

72.66 “Bodhisattvas dedicate the bliss of their nonattachment, the bliss of their nongrasping, and the bliss of their nirvāṇa to unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, seeking to make common cause with all beings. It is because they do not forsake cyclic existence that this should be regarded as their magnanimous intention.”

72.67 The bodhisattva Maitreya then said to the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, the Dharma of the bodhisattvas is wonderful and marvelous! The training of the bodhisattvas is wonderful and marvelous! Noble sons and noble daughters who seek to attain this wonderful and marvelous Dharma of the bodhisattvas should set their minds on unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.”<sup>575</sup>

CHAPTER 73: THE BODHISATTVA SADĀPRARUDITA'S ATTAINMENT OF THE MANIFOLD GATEWAYS OF MEDITATIVE STABILITY

- 73.1 Then the Blessed One addressed the venerable Subhūti: “Subhūti, noble sons or noble daughters who search for this perfection of wisdom should search for it in the manner in which the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita (‘He Who Was Always Weeping’) searched, who [now] practices chastity in the presence of the tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha named Bhīṣmagarjitanirghoṣasvara.”<sup>576</sup>
- 73.2 The venerable Subhūti then asked the Blessed One, “Blessed Lord, how did the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita search for this perfection of wisdom?”
- 73.3 The Blessed One replied to the venerable Subhūti, “Subhūti, when, in the past, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita searched for the perfection of wisdom, he searched without caring for his body, considering his life, or being intent on gain, honor, or fame. While he was searching for the perfection of wisdom, he stayed in a wilderness, and at that time he heard a voice resounding from the air, saying, ‘Noble son, journey to the east and there you will hear the perfection of wisdom! Come what may you should journey without paying attention to the weariness of your physical body, without paying attention to dullness and sleep, without paying attention to food, without paying attention to drink, without paying attention to night, without paying attention to day, without paying attention to cold, and without paying attention to heat. Do not let your mind settle on anything at all, inwardly or outwardly! Noble son, do not proceed while looking to the left! Do not look to the right! Do not proceed while looking to the west, [F.354.a] the north, the zenith, the nadir, or the intermediate directions! Noble son, by whatever means do not sway toward [false views about] perishable composites! Do not sway toward physical forms! Do not sway toward feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, or consciousness! Proceed in that manner! Those who are swayed thereby are deviating. If you ask from what they are deviating, they are deviating from the attributes of the buddhas. Those who deviate from the attributes of the buddhas roam in cyclic existence. Those who roam in cyclic existence do not find the perfection of wisdom!

73.4 “The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita replied to that voice, ‘I will do so! If you ask why, it is because I wish to illuminate all beings and wish to attain the attributes of the buddhas.’

73.5 “The voice then said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Excellent, Sadāprarudita, noble son! Excellent!’

73.6 “Then again the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita heard the voice. It said, ‘You should search for the perfection of wisdom, believing in the attributes of the buddhas, which are emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness! You should abandon signs, abandon entities, and abandon the false view that there are beings. Noble son, you should abandon evil associates! You should venerate, serve, and respect spiritual mentors who teach emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness, and [who teach that phenomena are without conditioning, unoriginated, nonarising, without entity, and unceasing. [F.354.b]

73.7 “ ‘Noble son, if you act in that manner, you will before long hear the perfection of wisdom, either from a book or from a monk teaching the Dharma. Noble son, you should perceive as the Teacher the one from whom you hear the perfection of wisdom. You should be grateful and mindful of that, saying, “This is my spiritual mentor. I will hear the perfection of wisdom from that one, and having heard it, {Va.239} I will make swift and irreversible progress to unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. I will approach the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas. I will be reborn in the buddhafiels, inseparable from the tathāgatas, abandon the unfavorable conditions, and acquire the freedoms and opportunities.”

73.8 “ ‘Noble son, you should consider these opportunities, and perceive that monk who teaches the Dharma as the Teacher. Noble son, you should not honor a monk who teaches the Dharma with thoughts of mundane material things. You should follow a monk who teaches the Dharma with interest in the Dharma and with respect.

73.9 “ ‘You should also understand the deeds of Māra. Noble son, there are even [acolytes of] evil Māra who approach bodhisattva great beings to dissuade them, [insinuating] that the [Teacher] reveres, tends toward, and enjoys sights, sounds, odors, tastes, and tangibles, when they have actually overcome these, and then revered, tended toward, and enjoyed them through skill in means. In this regard, noble son, you should not lose faith in the one who teaches the Dharma, but think as follows: “I do not understand that skill in means, but this [teacher] does understand with skill in means. This [teacher] reveres, tends toward, and enjoys these things in order that beings might acquire the roots of virtuous action, through the disciplining of beings. Bodhisattva great beings are without attachment or obscuration in any respect.” [F.355.a]

73.10 “ ‘At that time, also, noble son, you should examine the genuine principle of phenomena. Noble son, if you ask what is the genuine principle of phenomena, it is that all phenomena are without affliction and without purification. If you ask why, all phenomena are empty of inherent existence. All phenomena are without beings, without life forms, and without individual personalities. That is to say, they are like a magical display, like a dream, like an echo, and like a reflection. Noble son, when you examine the genuine principle of phenomena in that manner and follow the teacher of the Dharma, you will before long be emancipated through the perfection of wisdom.

73.11 “ ‘Noble son, you should be aware of yet another deed of Māra. Noble son, if a teacher of the Dharma should discourage you, noble son, while you seek the perfection of wisdom, and disregard you, you should not at all, noble son, be averse to that [perfection of wisdom]. Rather, with a mind intent on the Dharma, that respects the Dharma and is without weariness, you should follow the monk who preaches the Dharma.’

73.12 “Then, having heard this admonition from the voice, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita traveled toward the east. Not long after setting out, he had the following thought: ‘I did not ask that voice how far I should go.’ He stood still in that very place and he wept, cried out, sorrowed, and lamented. He then had this thought: ‘Having passed one or two or three or four or five or six or seven days in this very place, until I hear the perfection of wisdom I will not pay attention to the weariness of my physical body. [F.355.b] I will not pay attention to dullness and sleep. I will not pay attention to food. I will not pay attention to drink. I will not pay attention to night. I will not pay attention to day. I will not pay attention to cold, and I will not pay attention to heat.’ Subhūti, just as a man whose only child had passed away would experience suffering and great unhappiness, paying attention to nothing except the sorrow of [losing] his child due to the sorrow for his child, in the same way, Subhūti, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita {Va.240} at that time did not pay attention to anything except the thought, ‘When shall I hear that perfection of wisdom?’

73.13 “Then, Subhūti, while the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita stood there, pining away in that manner, an image of the Tathāgata appeared before him and gave his approval, saying, ‘Noble son, you have spoken well!

Excellent! The tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas of the past also searched for the perfection of wisdom in the manner in which you now search for it. Therefore, noble child, you should go continuously toward the east, with that same perseverance, that same enthusiasm, that same intent, and that same resolve. Five hundred yojanas from here, there is a city called Gandhavati, constructed of the seven precious materials, twelve yojanas in length and twelve yojanas in breadth, surrounded in succession by seven perimeter walls, surrounded in succession by seven moats, and surrounded by seven rows of palm trees. It is prosperous, flourishing, secure, happy, and joyful, filled with a large population. It has five hundred roadside stalls, evenly spaced, as if drawn in a painting, with bridges offering access to palanquins, vehicles, and pedestrians. [F.356.a] Even the walls surrounding the perimeter of that city are fashioned of the seven precious materials, and they are proportionate and tall. Even the ramparts of the walls, fashioned of the seven precious materials, are made from the gold of the river Jambu. From each of these ramparts there also grow trees fashioned of the seven precious materials, with diverse fruits. Between all these fruit [trees] there are threads also fashioned of the seven precious materials that connect them exclusively with the other trees. The entire city is covered with a network of golden bells, and that network of golden bells emits sweet, pleasant, and attractive tinkling when shaken by the wind. Just as a group of skilled [celestial] percussionists with their five sorts of instruments produces sounds that are sweet, pleasant, and attractive, in the same way that network of bells emits a sweet, pleasant, and attractive tinkling when shaken by the wind. These tinkling sounds also inspire beings to play, delight, and enjoy themselves. Even the moats that surround the city of Gandhavati are filled with constantly flowing water, endowed with the eight pure qualities, and on that water, which is neither too cold nor too hot, are boats fashioned of the seven precious materials. These have originated from the maturation of the past actions of those beings [inhabiting the city], and the beings on board play, rejoice, and enjoy themselves. All these waterways are also covered with blue lotuses, day lotuses, night lotuses, and white lotuses, and they are also covered with most fragrant species of flowers. Indeed, there is no species of flower at all in the world systems of the great trichilocosm that is not found in the city of Gandhavati. All around that city there are five hundred parks, all of them fashioned of the seven precious materials, [F.356.b] beautiful and absolutely delightful to behold. In each of these parks there are five hundred lakes measuring one earshot across, and each of these lakes is covered with blue lotuses, day lotuses, night lotuses, and white lotuses, fashioned of the seven precious materials, beautiful and delightful to behold. Every one of those blue lotuses, day lotuses, night lotuses, and white lotuses have the diameter of a cartwheel—the blue ones are all azure in color, look azure and appear as azure; the yellow ones are all golden in color, look yellow and appear as yellow; the red ones are all red in color, look red and appear as red; and the white ones are all white in color, look white and appear as white. All these lakes are filled with the sound of swans, {Va.241} ducks, cranes, Indian cranes, and shelducks. All of these parks are without private ownership or appropriation. They have originated from the maturation of the past actions of those same beings. That is to say, they have emerged entirely from the maturation of their belief in the profound Dharma, and from their having practiced the perfection of wisdom over a long time.

73.14 “ ‘Noble son, at the center of the crossroads in that city of Gandhavati is situated the house of the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, fashioned of the seven precious materials, and one yojana in circumference. It is adorned with various gemstones, delightful to behold, and surrounded by seven walls and seven rows of palm trees. Within the grounds of that mansion there are four gardens for the enjoyment of the household, namely the garden called Nityapramudita, the garden called Aśoka, the garden called Śokavigata, and the garden called Puṣpacitra. [F.357.a] Within each of these gardens there are also eight ponds, called Bhadrā, Bhadrottamā, Nandā, Nandottamā, Kṣamā, Kṣamotta, Niyatā, and Avivahā. The first side of each pond is fashioned of gold, the second side is fashioned of silver, the third side is fashioned of beryl, and the fourth side is fashioned of crystal. The base of [each pond] is fashioned of quartz, and the base is strewn with golden sand. Each pond has eight sets of steps, the height of a throne, and the surfaces of all the steps are embellished with variegated gemstones. From the gaps between all the steps grow plantain trees, fashioned of gold from the river Jambu. All these ponds are covered with various kinds of blue lotuses, day lotuses, night lotuses, and white lotus flowers, and they resonate with the sound of swans, Indian cranes, and shelducks. All around these ponds grow various flowering trees, and when these flowering trees are stirred by the wind, their flowers drop into the ponds. The water in all these ponds has the scent, color, taste, and feel of sandalwood. In this mansion there is the residence where the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata plays. With a retinue including sixty-eight thousand women, he is endowed with the five desirable attributes of the senses, and there he plays, delights, and amuses himself. The beings dwelling in that city, men and women, are also always joyful, and they play, delight, and amuse themselves since, in these parks and lakes, they are endowed with the five desirable attributes of the senses.

73.15 “ ‘The bodhisattva great being [F.357.b] Dharmodgata, however, after playing, delighting, and amusing himself with his retinue, thereafter always explains the perfection of wisdom. The citizens of that city, Gandhavati, constructed a teaching throne for the bodhisattva great being Dharmogata at the center of the city crossroads. Its legs are fashioned of gold, fashioned of silver, fashioned of beryl, and fashioned of crystal, and upon it is spread a mat of tree cotton, or a mat of wool, or a mat of padding, or a mat of silk. In the air above, about the height of half an earshot, there is a canopy, adorned with pearls. All around that [throne], flowers of five colors are sprinkled, strewn, and showered, and the area is also scented with diverse sweet fragrances. Respectful of the Dharma in this manner, the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata is seated upon it, explaining the Dharma of the perfection of wisdom. {Va.242} The beings who are present within range of that fragrance, respectful of this Dharma that the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has, listen to this perfection of wisdom. Many hundreds of living creatures, many thousands of living creatures, many hundred thousands of living creatures assemble there, and among those human beings and gods who assemble there to listen there are some who train in reading it, some who train in reciting it, some who comprehend it, some who grasp it, some who retain it, some who repeat it, some who question it, and some who follow it, focusing their attention correctly on it. None of these beings have attributes that would incline them to lapse. [F.358.a] Indeed, they all exclusively make irreversible progress toward unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Noble son, you should approach that bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata! From him you shall hear the perfection of wisdom. For a long time, noble son, he will be your spiritual mentor, your teacher. He will encourage, praise, and make you enthusiastic to [attain] unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Noble son, he has, in the past, also searched for the perfection of wisdom, just as you are now searching for it. Noble son, go forth, day and night, paying no attention to [the need for] respite! Before long you shall hear the perfection of wisdom!’

73.16 “Then, when the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita had heard this teaching of the Tathāgata, he became elated, joyful, resolute, and contented. Just as a man, hit with a poisoned arrow, does not pay attention to anything but the thought, ‘Where shall I find a doctor who can extract this arrow, one who will extract this arrow and release me from this suffering?’ in the same way, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita did not pay the slightest attention to anything but the thought, ‘When shall I see that noble son who will teach me the perfection of wisdom, so that, having listened to that Dharma, I shall abandon mental engagement that involves apprehending!’

“Then, while he remained in that very place, there arose in the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita the perception that did not settle on anything at all. On the basis of the perfection of wisdom and through the experience of his former lives, there then manifested many gateways of meditative stability. [F.358.b] These included (1) the meditative stability named viewing the essential nature of all phenomena; (2) the meditative stability named nonapprehension of the essential nature of all phenomena; (3) the meditative stability named emergence of wisdom with respect to all phenomena; (4) the meditative stability named nondifferentiation with respect to all phenomena; (5) the meditative stability named observation that all phenomena are unchanging; (6) the meditative stability named illuminator of all phenomena; (7) the meditative stability named separating all phenomena from darkness; (8) the meditative stability named destruction of ignorance with respect to all phenomena; (9) the meditative stability named nonapprehension of all phenomena; (10) the meditative stability named scattering of flowers; (11) the meditative stability named actualizing the embodiment of all phenomena; (12) the meditative stability named abandonment of magical display; (13) the meditative stability named actualizing images on the surface of a mirror; (14) the meditative stability named calling forth the voices of all beings; (15) the meditative stability named gladdening of all beings; (16) the meditative stability named following those learned in the languages of all beings; (17) the meditative stability named calling forth the variety of sounds, words, and syllables; (18) the meditative stability named unoppressed; (19) the meditative stability named naturally devoid of conventional expression; (20) the meditative stability named attainment of unobscured liberation; (21) the meditative stability named immaculate; (22) the meditative stability named nouns, lexical explanations, words, and syllables; (23) the meditative stability named nonperception of all phenomena; (24) the meditative stability named lexical explanations, words, and syllables with respect to all phenomena; (25) the meditative stability named unobscured limit of all phenomena; (26) the meditative stability named space-like; [F.359.a] (27) the meditative stability named vajra-like; (28) the meditative stability named approaching the king of physical forms; (29) the meditative stability named attainment of triumph; (30) the meditative stability named irreversible eyes; (31) the meditative stability named emerging from the realm of phenomena; (32) the meditative stability named inspiration; (33) the meditative stability named roaring of the lion; {Va.243} (34) the meditative stability named overwhelming of all beings; (35) the meditative stability named stainless; (36) the meditative stability named absence of afflicted mental states; (37) the meditative stability named lotus ornament; (38) the meditative stability named severance of doubt; (39) the meditative stability named pursuing of all essentials; (40) the meditative stability named sublimation of all phenomena; (41)

the meditative stability named attainment of the extrasensory powers, the powers, and the fearlessnesses; (42) the meditative stability named certain realization of all phenomena; (43) the meditative stability named ocean embracing all phenomena; (44) the meditative stability named abandonment of all indolence; (45) the meditative stability named illuminator of the profound doctrine; (46) the meditative stability named resembling Mount Sumeru; (47) the meditative stability named uncaptivated; (48) the meditative stability named destroyer of the entourage of Māra; (49) the meditative stability named nonfixation on the three realms; (50) the meditative stability named emergence of light rays; and (51) the meditative stability named sight of the tathāgatas.

73.18 “Abiding in these meditative stabilities, he saw immeasurable and countless lord buddhas in the world systems of the ten directions, demonstrating this very perfection of wisdom to bodhisattva great beings. [F.359.b] Those tathāgatas also applauded and inspired him, saying, ‘Noble son, we, too, in the past when we were engaged in the conduct of a bodhisattva, searched for the perfection of wisdom. We attained these meditative stabilities that you have now attained. And having attained those meditative stabilities, we indeed realized the perfection of wisdom and became established in the dharmas from which there is no regression. When we behold the inherent existence and essential nature of these meditative stabilities, we do not see anything at all that becomes absorbed in them, that arises from them, that would practice for awakening, or that would attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.

73.19 “ ‘Noble son, this perfection of wisdom is without conceits about anything at all. Noble son, because we are established in the absence of conceits, our bodies have acquired a color resembling that of gold. Not to mention the śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, even the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas cannot grasp the measure of, or disclose the limits of, the thirty-two major marks of a great person, the eighty excellent minor marks, the aureole of light extending a full arm span, the inconceivable attributes of the buddhas, the gnosis of the buddhas, the wisdom of the buddhas, the unsurpassed meditative stabilities, or the perfection of enlightened attributes. Therefore, noble son, you should indeed cultivate respect for these attributes. You should cultivate an increasing interest and belief in them. If you ask why, noble son, unsurpassed, complete enlightenment is not a rarity for those who are interested in it and who believe in it. Noble son, you [F.360.a] should also cultivate respect and empathy for spiritual mentors. If you ask why, bodhisattva great beings who have been accepted by spiritual mentors will attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment.’

73.20 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita asked those tathāgatas, ‘Who is my spiritual mentor?’

“Those tathāgatas replied to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has over a long period of time brought you to maturity in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, and favored you with the perfection of wisdom. He has also trained you in skill in means. It is he, noble son, who has benefited you. He is your spiritual mentor. Noble son, you should keep in mind the deeds he has undertaken on your behalf. If, noble son, {Va.244} you were to carry the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata on your head like a turban for one eon, two eons, a hundred eons, a thousand eons, or even longer, and furnish him with the resources that bring happiness, or grant to him all those sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and tangibles, as many as there are in the world systems of the great trichiliocosm, even by that, noble son, you would not repay him. If you ask why, noble son, it is through his power that you have acquired such meditative stabilities, [F.360.b] that you have listened to those skilled in the perfection of wisdom, and that you will attain the perfection of wisdom.”

73.21 This completes the seventy-third chapter, “The Bodhisattva Sadāprarudita’s Attainment of the Manifold Gateways of Meditative Stability,” from The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines.”

CHAPTER 74: SADĀPRARUDITA

- 74.1 “Then, having inspired the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, those tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas again disappeared. On arising from those meditative stabilities, [Sadāprarudita], the noble son, then thought, ‘From where did these tathāgatas come? Where have these tathāgatas gone?’ He no longer saw those tathāgatas, and he became depressed and tormented. He had the thought, ‘That sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has acquired the dhāraṇīs. He has mastered the five extrasensory powers and has performed his duties with respect to the conquerors of the past. He has benefited me and he is my spiritual mentor. For a long period of time he has acted on my behalf. I should approach the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata and ask him about this matter! From where did those tathāgatas come, and to where did they go?’
- 74.2 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita cultivated enthusiasm, confidence, reverence, and respect for that bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, and before long he had the following thought: ‘With what kind of honor should I venerate the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata? Since I am poor, [F.361.a] I have nothing at all worthy of presenting in honor of that sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, whether clothing, gemstones, gold, pearls, beryl, conch, crystal, coral, silver, flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, or parasols. It would not be right for me to approach that sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata in this manner. I am downcast and saddened.’
- 74.3 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita finally continued on his way, focusing his attention on his purpose—to respect and venerate such a spiritual teacher. In due course he reached a city, went into the middle of the marketplace, and thought, ‘I should sell this body of mine! With its price I will worship the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata!’

- 74.4 “ ‘Over a long period of time almost a thousand bodies of mine have perished and rotted, been sold, and been eradicated. Roaming again and again through inestimable cyclic existence, I have experienced inestimable sufferings among the hells, the animals, and the worlds of Yama, due to the primary cause of desire and the basis of desire, but not for the sake of a Dharma of this kind, and not for the sake of worshiping beings such as this bodhisattva.’
- 74.5 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita went into the middle of the marketplace, raised his voice, and cried out, ‘Who wants to buy a man? Who wants to buy a man?’
- 74.6 “Thereupon the evil Māra [F.361.b] thought, ‘I should obstruct this bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita because, if he sells himself out of desire for the Dharma, and then makes offerings to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, {Va.245} and then, with regard to the perfection of wisdom, asks him with skill in means how bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom may swiftly attain unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, acquire ocean-like erudition, be unharmed by the gods including Māra and the domain of Māra, and conclusively perfect all enlightened attributes, he will work for the benefit of all beings, and they too will bypass my perceptual range. And once other beings, too, have bypassed my perceptual range, he will then attain consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment!’
- 74.7 “Then the evil Māra overwhelmed the brahmins and householders so that in no way could they hear the voice of the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita saying, ‘Who wants to buy a man? Who wants to buy a man?’ When the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita could not find a buyer for himself, he went to one side and wept, thinking, ‘Alas! There is no buyer at all for my body! I am not going to achieve what I want to achieve!’
- 74.8 “Thereupon Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, had the following thought: ‘I should examine whether or not this bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita will sacrifice his own body with genuine intent, out of desire for the Dharma.’ Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, [F.362.a] then emanated as a brahmin boy, approached the place where the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita was, and said to him, ‘Noble sir, why do you stand there depressed, sorrowful, and weeping?’
- 74.9 Sadāprarudita replied, ‘Brahmin boy, when I wanted to sell my body out of desire for the Dharma and to worship the Dharma, I could not find a buyer. I thought that after selling my body, I should worship the perfection of wisdom, and also venerate the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, but I did not find anyone to buy a body such as this! Alas, how meager is my merit!’

- 74.10 “Then that brahmin boy said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, I myself do not need a man, but I am making a sacrificial offering. For that I need a human heart, blood, bones, and marrow. Will you give them if I pay for them?’
- 74.11 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita thought, ‘So that I might become skilled in the perfection of wisdom, I have in this boy found a buyer for my body, heart, blood, bones, and marrow. I have found the best of profits. My body is indeed useful!’ Elated and with joyful mind, he said to that boy, ‘Boy, I will give you this body, since you have need of it!’
- 74.12 “The boy asked him, ‘Noble son, what price should I give you?’
“The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita answered, [F.362.b] ‘Boy, you may give me whatever you will!’ Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, holding a sharp weapon, pierced his right shoulder, and made the blood flow. He cut his right thigh open, extracted the flesh, {Va.246} and went toward a wall in order to break the bones. A merchant’s daughter who was sitting on the roof of her house then saw the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita going toward the wall in order to break his bones after having extracted the flesh from his thigh, and she thought, ‘Why is that noble son harming himself? I will approach that noble son and ask him.’ The merchant’s daughter went to where the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita was, and asked him, ‘Noble sir, why are you injuring yourself in this way? What will you do with this blood, bone, and marrow?’
- 74.13 “Sadāprarudita said to the girl, ‘When I have sold them to that boy, I will worship the perfection of wisdom, and serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata.’
- 74.14 “Thereupon, the merchant’s daughter said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble sir, what are the enlightened attributes that you will have if you sell your heart, blood, bone, and marrow, and then serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata?’
- 74.15 “He replied to the girl, ‘Girl, he will teach me skill in means with regard to the perfection of wisdom and I will train in it, so that, once I have trained under that noble son, all beings will follow, [F.363.a] and after I have attained manifest buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, my body will become golden in color, and I will acquire the thirty-two major marks of a great person, the eighty excellent minor marks, an aureole of light extending a full arm span, infinite light rays, great loving kindness, great compassion, great empathetic joy, great equanimity, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas, the five extrasensory powers without degeneration, inconceivable purity of ethical discipline, inconceivable purity of meditative stability, and inconceivable purity of wisdom. Moreover, I will share with all beings the inconceivable distinct qualities of the buddhas and the attainment of manifest buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment!

74.16 “Then the merchant’s daughter said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘How wonderful, noble sir, are these extensive attributes that you have proclaimed! Noble sir, even for a single one of those attributes it would be worthwhile sacrificing all one’s bodies, numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, let alone one of them! Noble sir, you have proclaimed these inconceivable and extensive attributes of the buddhas, which bring benefit and happiness to all beings. [F.363.b] Noble sir, I will request from my parents and give you whatever you need—be it gold, silver, beryl, precious gems, pearls, flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, clothing, parasols, victory banners, or ribbons—with which to serve that sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. Do not inflict such injuries on yourself! I also will go with you that place where the sublime, bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata is. Together with you, I also will cultivate the roots of virtuous action in order to attain such attributes!’ {Va.247}

74.17 “Thereupon Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, caused the body of the brahmin boy to disappear, and manifested in his own body before the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, saying, ‘Noble son, your commitment is steadfast. Excellent! Excellent! Noble son, formerly too, when the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas of the past practiced the conduct of the bodhisattvas, they searched skillfully for the sake of the perfection of wisdom with such earnestness for the Dharma, and after questioning spiritual mentors, they attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Noble son, I have no need for your heart, blood, bones, or marrow. I came here to test you. Noble son, you [F.364.a] may ask for whatever boon I can give!’

74.18 “Śakra replied, ‘Noble son, that is not something within my own domain—it is only within the domain of the lord buddhas. So you should ask for another boon. Choose another boon!’

74.19 “The bodhisattva Sadāprarudita said, ‘Lord of the gods, you should not worry! In order to make my own body whole again, the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas will consecrate my own declaration of truth, uttered without deceit and with higher aspiration, through which they will prophesy my attaining of unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. Lord of the gods, through that truth and these words of truth may my body become as it was before!’ Then, in an instant, in a moment, in a second, through the power of the buddhas and the purity of this higher aspiration, the body of the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita became as it had been before. Then Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, was deflated. Unable to offer the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita any response apart from that, he disappeared from that very place.

74.20 “Then the merchant’s daughter said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Come here, noble sir. Let us go into my house. I shall ask my parents for our riches and give them to you, so that you may, out of desire for the Dharma, worship the perfection of wisdom, and [F.364.b] serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata.’ The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter then went together to her house. The merchant’s daughter went inside and said to her parents, ‘Mother and father, please give me bountiful riches. Please give me much gold, silver, jewels, gems, clothing, flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, religious robes, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, and particular sorts of cymbals. Together with these five hundred maidens you gave me as servants, will you permit me to go with the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita to worship the perfection of wisdom and to serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata? When he has explained the Dharma to us, we will attain the inconceivable attributes of the buddhas.’

74.21 “The girl’s parents then asked her, ‘Who is this bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita? Where is he right now?’

“The girl replied, ‘This noble son is standing at the door of our house. Through his higher aspiration, this noble son has set out for unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. That is to say, he is seeking the Dharma in order to liberate all beings from the inestimable sufferings of cyclic existence. {Va.248} So he sought to sell his own body [F.365.a] in order to serve the perfection of wisdom and the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, but could not find a buyer for his body. He then became sorrowful, distressed, introspective, and dejected and stood there weeping. Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, then emanated as a brahmin boy and in order to test him, said, “Noble son, why do you stand here weeping, sorrowful, distressed, introspective, and dejected?” and he replied, “I want to sell my own body but there is no one to buy it.” Śakra, transformed into the body of that boy, then said, “Noble son, why do you want to sell your body?” and Sadāprarudita replied, “So as to worship the perfection of wisdom and serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. I am depending on the attributes of the buddhas.” Śakra, transformed into the form of that boy, then said, “Noble son, I do not need a man, but I am making a sacrifice, so for that I need a human heart, blood, bones, and marrow.” Then that noble son, without discouragement, said, “I will donate them!” Holding a sharp weapon, he pierced his own shoulder and made the blood flow. He cut his thigh open, extracted the flesh, and then went toward a wall in order to break his bones, thinking to donate his bones and marrow. But from the roof of the house I saw him bleeding and thought, "What is that man doing, harming himself in this way?" I approached and asked him, [F.365.b] "Noble sir, why are you drawing your own blood?" Then that noble son replied to me, "I am donating my blood, heart, bones, and marrow to this brahmin boy. If you ask why, I am poor and have no other wealth at all." I then asked him, "What would you do with that wealth?" and he replied, "I must worship the perfection of wisdom, and out of desire for the Dharma, I must serve the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata." So I asked him, "What sort of enlightened attributes would you seek as a result of this? What are the details of those enlightened attributes?" And he replied, "He will reveal to me the qualities of the buddhas and the inconceivable enlightened attributes of the buddhas. From him I will obtain such unassailable and inestimable attributes of the tathāgatas. I will attain them." With elation and great joy I heard about those inconceivable attributes of the buddhas, and thought to myself, "It is wonderful that this noble son can undertake such austerities. If this noble son would sacrifice his own body out of desire for the Dharma, why should we not worship this Dharma? Why should we not make aspiration prayers to reach such states? We have an abundance of resources." Then I said to this noble son, "Noble sir, do not inflict such injury on yourself! I shall ask my parents for much wealth and give it to you. With that you should serve the perfection of wisdom and the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. [F.366.a] I too shall go together with you to the place where the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata resides. I too shall worship that noble sir and I too shall perfect the attributes of the buddhas, such as you have described, up to and including unsurpassed all-aspect omniscience." Therefore, mother and father, grant me an abundance of wealth! Will you permit me to make offerings, along with this noble son, to the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata?' {Va.249} [B78]

74.22 "Then the parents of that girl replied, 'Daughter, the story of this noble son that you have related is one of great hardship. These attributes for which this noble son would experience such hardship in order to bring happiness to all beings are the most distinguished in all world systems, utterly inconceivable. Therefore, we permit you to go. Let us accompany you too to see and worship that sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata!'

74.23 "Thereupon the girl replied to her parents who wished to go to worship and venerate the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, 'I would not obstruct anyone from virtuous actions.'

74.24 “Then the merchant’s daughter, accompanied by her parents, furnished with five hundred carriages and also furnished with those five hundred maidens, brought a variety of flowers, a variety of clothing, [F.366.b] incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, religious robes, parasols, victory banners, and ribbons, and she brought golden flowers and silver flowers. She brought a variety of jewels, gold, gems, pearls, beryl, conch, crystal, and coral, and she brought an abundance of food, delicacies, and drinks. She rode in one carriage together with the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, with an entourage comprising those five hundred maidens, who rode in their five hundred carriages, and they set out in the vanguard, toward the east, accompanied by a huge retinue.

74.25 “Finally, after some time, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita saw the city of Gandhavati from a distance, constructed of the seven precious materials, beautiful and magnificent to behold, twelve yojanas in length and twelve yojanas in breadth. It was surrounded by seven perimeter walls fashioned of the seven precious materials, with seven arches, and surrounded by seven moats and seven rows of palm trees, prosperous, flourishing, secure, happy, and joyful, with a large population, with five hundred roadside stalls, as if drawn in a painting, with bridges offering access to vehicles and pedestrians. At the center of the crossroads he also saw, seated upon the throne of the Dharma, the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, who was teaching the Dharma, surrounded by an assembly of many hundred thousands, facing toward him. The moment he saw him he was filled with bliss, such as that which a monk with one-pointed absorption acquires when absorbed in the first meditative concentration. [F.367.a]

74.26 “Seeing him, he thought, ‘It would not be appropriate for me to approach the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata riding in a carriage.’ He dismounted, and the five hundred maidens headed by the merchant’s daughter also dismounted from their carriages. Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, accompanied by the merchant’s daughter and her five hundred maidens, went forward, holding their inestimable ornaments, and approached the place where the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata was seated.

74.27 “On that occasion the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata had created, for the purpose of teaching the perfection of wisdom, a tower, made of the seven precious materials, adorned with red sandalwood, bedecked with strings of pearls, and in the four corners of the tower luminous gemstones were placed to perform the function of lamps. {Va.250} Four silver censers were suspended in the air, and in them burned incense of pure black eaglewood, as an offering to the perfection of wisdom. Within that tower a [teaching] throne was positioned, made of the seven precious materials, and on it was placed a casket with four gemstones. Inside that, the Perfection of Wisdom was kept, inscribed in molten blue beryl on gold tablets. The tower was also adorned with garlands of various flowers and suspended silk hangings.

74.28 “The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter with her five hundred maidens looked upon that tower, adorned with inestimable ornaments, and they saw many thousands of gods. [F.367.b] Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, was also present, sprinkling, strewing, and showering down over that tower divine coral flowers, divine sandalwood powder, divine gold powder, and divine silver powder, and they heard the sound of divine musical instruments. The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita then asked Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, ‘Lord of the gods, why are you, together with many thousands of gods, sprinkling, strewing, and showering down over this tower fashioned of gemstones, coral flowers, sandalwood powders and so forth, and why do the gods play music in the air?’

74.29 “Śakra, mighty lord of the gods replied to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, do you not know? This is the Perfection of Wisdom, the dear mother of bodhisattva great beings, the progenitor, the matrix giving birth to them. When they have trained in it, bodhisattva great beings will acquire the perfection of all enlightened attributes, all the qualities of the buddhas, and all-aspect omniscience.’

74.30 “The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita replied to Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, ‘Kauśika, where is this Perfection of Wisdom, the dear mother of bodhisattva great beings, the progenitor, and matrix giving birth to them?’

“Śakra replied, ‘The bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has placed it inside the tower, inscribed in molten beryl on gold tablets, [F.368.a] and sealed it with seven seals. We cannot show it to you.’

74.31 “Thereupon the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter, with her five hundred maidens, gathered together and they made offerings to the Perfection of Wisdom with the flowers, garlands, clothing, jewels, incense, perfume, unguents, powders, religious robes, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, and the gold and silver flowers that they had brought along, and among these, they deposited some as an offering to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. Then, after first presenting these offerings of flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, clothing, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, and diverse musical instruments to the perfection of wisdom, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita approached the place where the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata was seated. Going there, he sprinkled, scattered, and showered the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata with flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, clothing, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, sandalwood powders, and gold and silver flowers, in order to worship the Dharma.

74.32 “Those flowers formed a floral tower above [the head of] the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. The diversely colored gold and silver flowers {Va.251} also formed a celestial palace in the sky. [F.368.b] The religious robes, clothing, and jewels formed, as it were, a cloud of diverse precious materials in the air. Seeing such miraculous powers of the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter, with her five hundred maidens, thought, ‘How miraculous, how powerful, how resplendent, and how wonderful is this bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata! Since this noble son emanates such miraculous abilities when he practices the conduct of a bodhisattva, how much more will he do so when he has attained manifest buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment!’ Thereupon, in the merchant’s daughter with her five hundred maidens there arose an empathetic joy and respect for the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. They all set their minds on unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, and made the following aspiration prayers: ‘Through this root of virtue, may we in the future become tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas. Also, when we practice the conduct of a bodhisattva, may we acquire these same attributes that the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has acquired! May we revere the perfection of wisdom, just as this sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata reveres the perfection of wisdom! May we reveal it to many living beings, just as this bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata reveals it to many beings! [F.369.a] May we possess and perfect skill in means with regard to the perfection of wisdom, just as this bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata possesses and perfects skill in means!’

74.33 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter with her five hundred maidens, after they had presented their offerings to the perfection of wisdom, paid their respects to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, and prostrated their heads at his feet. With reverence and service, they stood to one side with their palms together. Having stood to one side, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita said to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, ‘Noble son, when I was searching for the perfection of wisdom, in the wilderness I heard a voice and journeyed to the east. On the way, I had the thought, “I did not ask that voice how far I should go. I did not ask it from whom I should hear and obtain the perfection of wisdom.” So I became distressed and sorrowful. After passing seven days in that place, wondering why I had not asked that voice how far I should go and from whom I should hear the perfection of wisdom, I did not pay attention even to food and drink, or anything except my sorrow thinking about the perfection of wisdom. [F.369.b] Then in front of me an image of the Tathāgata appeared and said to me, “Noble son, five hundred yojanas from here, there is a city called Gandhavati. Go there and you will see the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata explaining the perfection of wisdom.” Then, just as that image of the Tathāgata advised, I journeyed toward the east, and saw from afar that you were explaining the sublime Dharma. Immediately after seeing that vision, I acquired a bliss like that of a monk absorbed in the first meditative concentration. I was filled with joy and bliss, and without moving from that very spot, I heard you explaining the perfection of wisdom. After hearing that, many hundreds of gateways of meditative stability arose. {Va.252} When I stood there, also the tathāgatas inspired me from the ten directions, saying, “Noble son, these meditative stabilities have emerged from the perfection of wisdom. Excellent! Excellent! Established in it, we, too, perfected the attributes of the buddhas!” Then after teaching me most excellently, these tathāgatas disappeared. I arose from that meditative stability and thought, “From where did these tathāgatas come, and where have they gone?” Then I had the further thought, “The sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata has cultivated the roots of virtuous action, having undertaken duties on behalf of the conquerors of the past. [F.370.a] Since he has trained in the skill in means associated with the perfection of wisdom, he will show me from where these tathāgatas came, and where these tathāgatas went.” Therefore, noble son, I ask you from where these tathāgatas came, and where these tathāgatas have gone. Teach me, noble son, so that we may know from where these tathāgatas came, and where they have gone, and so that we may behold the tathāgatas!’ ”

CHAPTER 75: DHARMODGATA

“The bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata then replied to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, tathāgatas do not come from anywhere, nor do they go anywhere. The tathāgatas do not move. The real nature is the tathāgatas. Noble son, nonarising neither goes nor comes. That nonarising is the tathāgatas. Noble son, the very limit of reality neither goes nor comes. That very limit of reality is the tathāgatas. Noble son, in emptiness there is neither going nor coming. That emptiness is the tathāgatas. Noble son, the definitive nature neither comes nor goes. That definitive nature is the tathāgatas. Noble son, freedom from desire neither comes nor goes. That freedom from desire is the tathāgatas. [F.370.b] Noble son, cessation neither comes nor goes. That cessation is the tathāgatas. Noble son, the expanse of space neither comes nor goes. That expanse of space is the tathāgatas. Noble son, phenomena other than these attributes are not the tathāgatas. Noble son, the real nature of these attributes and the real nature of the tathāgatas is a single real nature. Noble son, in the real nature there are no dual aspects. Noble son, the real nature is one—it is not two, and it is not three. Noble son, because the real nature is nonexistent, it cannot be counted. Noble son, just as when someone tormented by the heat of spring, during the last month of spring, at noon might see a mirage in motion, and might run toward it, thinking, ‘Here I shall bathe. Here I shall drink,’ do you think, noble son, that that water has come from anywhere? Does it go anywhere—into the ocean of the east, or the oceans of the south, west, or north?’

“Sadāprarudita replied, ‘Noble son, since there is no water in a mirage, how could it possibly come and go! That person tormented by the heat of spring perceives water but there is no water in a mirage. So he is a naïve person, a person of feeble acumen. In that mirage, there exists no essential nature of water.’

- 75.3 “ ‘Noble son, it is so! It is so,’ said Dharmodgata. ‘In the same way, noble son, anyone whatsoever who is fixated on [the notion of] the tathāgatas as form or sound, and who imagines that the tathāgatas come and go, is a naïve person, a person of feeble acumen, just like someone who perceives water where there is no water. If you ask why, the tathāgatas should not be regarded as the buddha body of form, because they are the buddha body of reality. [F.371.a] Noble son, in reality there is neither coming nor going. In the same way, noble son, the tathāgatas also are without coming and going. Noble son, just as the corps of elephants, corps of cavalry, corps of chariots, or corps of infantry conjured by an illusionist is without coming or going, in the same way, noble son, the tathāgatas also are without coming or going. Noble son, just as someone in a dream may see one tathāgata—or two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, or a hundred thousand tathāgatas, or even more than that—but on waking would not see even a single tathāgata, do you think, noble son, that these tathāgatas have come from anywhere, or gone anywhere?’
- 75.4 “ ‘Noble son, the phenomena of a dream are without any consummate reality whatsoever. {Va.254} Dreams are false and inauthentic.’ replied Sadāprarudita.
- 75.5 “ ‘In the same way, noble son,’ continued Dharmodgata, ‘all phenomena are like a dream—so said the tathāgatas. [F.371.b] All those whosoever who do not properly know that all phenomena are like a dream, as the tathāgatas have explained, are fixated on [the notion of] the tathāgatas as a cluster of nominal aggregates or a cluster of physical forms, and in consequence they imagine that the tathāgatas come and go. This is because they do not know reality. Noble son, all those who hold that the tathāgatas come or go are simple, ordinary people. All of them have roamed, are roaming, and will roam in cyclic existence, with its five classes of living beings. All of them are far from the perfection of wisdom. All of them are far from the attributes of the buddhas. Noble son, those who properly know that the tathāgatas have explained all phenomena to resemble a dream do not conceive of anything at all that comes or goes. Those who know this reality of the tathāgatas approach unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. They practice the perfection of wisdom. They are the disciples of the tathāgatas. They do not deliberately squander alms donated by citizens, and they are worthy recipients of the world’s generosity. Noble son, the gems of the oceans have not come from the east, and they have not come from any other of the ten directions—the south, the west, the north, the intermediate directions, the zenith, or the nadir—but gemstones appear in the oceans through the causal basis of beings' roots of virtuous actions. They have not appeared without a cause, but contingent on causes and conditions, they appear through dependent origination.

75.6 “ ‘Even when these gemstones cease to exist, they do not transmigrate in any of the ten directions. [F.372.a] They do not go anywhere, but nevertheless gemstones do appear when those conditions exist, and they disappear when those conditions are absent. In the same way, noble son, the perfect bodies of the tathāgatas have not come from any worlds of the ten directions, nor will they go anywhere. Nor did these bodies of the lord buddhas appear without a causal basis, but they appeared contingent on the causes and conditions of their perfect past conduct and within the apprehending of beings whose ripening of past deeds originated from causes. These bodies do not exist in any of the ten directions, but they are perfectly present when those causes and conditions exist, and they are not perfectly present when those conditions are absent.

75.7 “ ‘Noble son, this is just as when the sound of a lute arises—it has not come from anywhere, and when it stops, it does not go anywhere, nor does it transmigrate anywhere, but it is contingent on causes and conditions that are dependently originated. That is to say, the sound of a stringed instrument emerges dependent on the hollow gourd of the instrument, the skin, the neck, the strings, the supporting cushion, the plectrum, and human exertion. The sound does not emerge from the hollow gourd, nor does it emerge from the skin, the neck, the strings, or the plectrum, nor does it emerge from the supporting cushion or human exertion, but the sound does emerge from all of them together. When it stops, that sound does not go anywhere. In the same way, noble son, the perfect body of the tathāgatas is also contingent on causes and conditions. It is perfected through the many roots of their virtuous actions. It has not appeared from a single cause. It has not appeared from a single condition. [F.372.b] The body of the buddhas has not appeared from a single root of virtue. It has not appeared without a causal basis. That is to say, it has appeared from a multiplicity of causes and conditions but does not come from anywhere. And it does not go anywhere, even when that cluster of causes and conditions is absent. Noble son, you should know the reality of all phenomena in the same manner. Noble son, if you know that the tathāgatas and all phenomena are nonarising and unceasing, you will be assured of unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. You will certainly practice the skill in means associated with the perfection of wisdom.’

75.8 “As he explained this formulation of the Dharma that teaches how the tathāgatas are without coming and going, the great earth shook and all world systems of the great trichilocosm shook in six ways. They shook, shuddered, and juddered. They quivered, careened, and convulsed. All the domains of Māra were also disturbed and diminished. All the plants, herbs, and forests that there were in the world systems of the great trichiliocosm bowed in the direction of the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. Unseasonal flowers also appeared, and from the air above a rain of flowers descended. Diverse drumbeats also resounded from the air above. The Four Great Kings and Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, [F.373.a] also sprinkled, scattered, and showered down divine coral flowers, divine sandalwood powders, divine flowers, and other powders over the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, and they said, 'Noble son, through your enlightened attributes we have now heard a sermon originating from ultimate reality, which is hard for the entire world to have confidence in, an exegesis that cannot be given by bodhisattvas who are settled in [the false views of] perishable composites!'

75.9 "Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita asked the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, 'What are the causes and what are the conditions that made this great earth quake?'

" 'Noble son,' replied Dharmodgata, 'it is because you requested this explanation concerning the noncoming and nongoing of the tathāgatas. While I was teaching it, a thousand living creatures attained the acceptance that phenomena are nonarising, eight hundred million set their minds on unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, and sixty-four thousand living creatures became stainless and immaculate, and their eye of the doctrine became pure with regard to phenomena.'

75.10 "Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita was delighted. He was filled with abundant joy, and thought, 'I have won a boon! As a result of asking for this exegesis of the Dharma concerning the perfection of wisdom, and the noncoming and nongoing of the tathāgatas, I have been of benefit to so many beings. This root of virtue of mine should in and of itself suffice to ensure that I will attain perfect, unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. [F.373.b] Henceforth there is no doubt that I will attain unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. I will undoubtedly become a tathāgata, arhat, completely awakened buddha!'

75.11 "Delighted and joyful, filled with contentment, he ascended into the sky to the height of seven palm trees, and as he remained suspended in the sky at the height of seven palm trees, he thought, 'How should I, standing in the air in this manner, worship the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata?'

75.12 "Then Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, saw the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita ascended in the sky, and understood with his own mind the thoughts that he was thinking. He presented him with divine coral flowers and said, 'Noble son, you should worship the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata with these flowers! {Va.256} Son of enlightened family, since through your power you have today benefited many thousands of beings, we will assist you, noble son! Noble son, extremely rare are those who would remain enthusiastic for the sake of all beings over immeasurable and countless eons, in the manner in which you have been enthusiastic!

75.13 “Then the bodhisattva great being took those coral flowers from Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, and he scattered and showered them over the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. He presented the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata [F.374.a] with his own body and said, ‘Noble son, I offer my body to you, so that it might henceforth be of service.’ Thereupon he descended from the sky and presented himself; with his palms together, he stood in front of the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata.

75.14 “The merchant’s daughter with her five hundred maidens then said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble sir, we, too, will offer our bodies to you in this manner. Through this root of virtue may we, too, attain these same attributes! Noble sir, henceforth may we, accompanying you, worship the buddhas and the bodhisattvas! May we dwell with you!’

75.15 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita replied to that merchant’s daughter and those five hundred maidens, ‘Young women, if you are sincerely compatible with my aspirations and sincerely offer your bodies to me, I will indeed accept you.’

75.16 “The young women replied, ‘We are sincerely compatible with your aspirations and sincerely offer our bodies to you, so that you may do as you will.’

75.17 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita presented to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata those five hundred maidens, headed by the merchant’s daughter, embellished with all their ornaments, and their five hundred carriages, also adorned with ornaments, and said, ‘Noble sir, I offer these maidens and these five hundred carriages to you, so that you may enjoy them.’

75.18 “Then Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, [F.374.b] applauded that noble son: ‘Excellent, noble son! Excellent!’ And he continued, ‘Noble son, bodhisattva great beings should renounce all their possessions in that manner. With such thoughts of renunciation bodhisattva great beings will swiftly attain manifest buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. If they make offerings in that manner to those who preach the Dharma, they will be able to hear the skill in means that is associated with the perfection of wisdom. Formerly when the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas of the past practiced the conduct of a bodhisattva, they maintained such renunciation and achieved unsurpassed, complete enlightenment. They also asked questions about this skill in means that is associated with the perfection of wisdom.'

75.19 "Then the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, in order to perfect Sadāprarudita's roots of virtuous action, accepted those five hundred maidens, headed by the merchant's daughter, and their five hundred carriages. After accepting them, he [immediately] gave them back to that noble son, Sadāprarudita. Then the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata arose from his seat and went inside his house. The sun also set.

75.20 "The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita then had the following thought: 'It would not be proper and it would not be fitting for me, having come here out of desire for the Dharma, to sit or to lie down. I will remain either standing or walking, until the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata [F.375.a] comes out of his house to teach the Dharma.' {Va.257}

75.21 "The bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata then remained for seven years in a single meditative absorption, and he maintained the countless and immeasurable thousands of meditative stabilities of bodhisattvas, which originate from the skill in means associated with the perfection of wisdom. For seven years, also, the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita never cultivated thoughts of desire, and he never cultivated thoughts of malice, thoughts of harm, or attachment to tastes. Rather, he thought, 'How long will it be until we see this bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata arise [from his meditations], so that we may spread out a teaching seat on which that noble sir, the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, will sit and teach the Dharma?' And he had no other wish apart from thinking, 'After sweeping and sprinkling the ground where the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata will explain the skill in means associated with the perfection of wisdom, I will scatter various flowers upon it.' The merchant's daughter with her five hundred maidens also trained under the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and remained there in those same two modes of conduct [that is to say, of standing and walking]. In all their activities they indeed imitated him.

75.22 "Then one day a voice emerged from the sky, saying that in seven days the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata would rise from his meditative stability, and, having arisen, would teach the Dharma in the middle of the city. [F.375.b] The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita heard that voice, and having heard it, he became elated, joyful, delighted, and contented. Together with the merchant's daughter and her five hundred maidens he swept that ground and spread out a teaching seat made of the seven precious materials. Then the merchant's daughter and all her five hundred maidens took off their upper robes and spread out those five hundred upper robes upon the doctrinal seat as a cushion where the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata would sit and teach the Dharma. Then, when the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita searched all around for water to sprinkle on that ground, he did not find any water because the evil Māra had concealed the water for sprinkling on that ground, so that there was every chance he would be saddened, displeased, and change his mind, eliminating his roots of virtuous action and causing those offerings also to deteriorate. But then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita had the following thought: ‘Well then, I will pierce my own body, and sprinkle this ground with blood. If you ask why, since on this ground there is much dust that is unsuitable for the body of the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, what else should I do with this body which will certainly perish? {Va.258} It is better that my body should be destroyed by such an action rather than having my body wasted ineffectually. [F.376.a] Many thousands of my bodies have roamed again and again in cyclic existence due to attachment, and on the basis of attachment and as signs of attachment, I did not [have this opportunity] among such wasted circumstances.’ Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita took a sharp weapon, pierced his entire body, and sprinkled that ground entirely with his own blood. The merchant’s daughter with her five hundred maidens, training under the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, also took sharp weapons, pierced their own bodies, and sprinkled their blood on that ground. Neither the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita nor those maidens had changed their minds, and Evil Māra had been able to find no opportunity to obstruct their virtuous approach.

75.23 “Then Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, had the following thought: ‘It is wonderful how this bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita desires the Dharma, is steadfast in his commitments, has donned the great armor, disregards his body and life for the sake of unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, and resolves, once he has attained consummate buddhahood in unsurpassed, complete enlightenment, to liberate beings through his higher aspiration from the inestimable sufferings of cyclic existence!’ Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, then transformed all that blood into divine sandalwood water, and all around that ground, as far as a hundred yojanas, an inconceivable fragrance of divine sandalwood wafted. [F.376.b] Then Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, you are unsurpassed for inconceivable perseverance, your desire for the Dharma, and your search for the Dharma. Excellent! Excellent! Noble son, the tathāgatas, arhats, completely awakened buddhas of the past also attained unsurpassed, complete enlightenment through such higher aspirations, such perseverance, and such desire for the Dharma.’

75.24 “Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita had the following thought: ‘Since I have spread out the teaching seat for the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, and sprinkled and swept this ground as well, where shall I find flowers to scatter on this ground and to scatter over the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata when he teaches the Dharma?’

75.25 “Thereupon, Śakra, mighty lord of the gods, said to the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita, ‘Noble son, take these divine coral flowers and you may scatter this ground with flowers! You may also scatter them over the teaching seat on which the sublime bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata will sit and teach the Dharma!’ And he presented him with four hundred loads of divine coral flowers. The bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita thereupon accepted those flowers, and scattered some of those flowers on the ground. He kept some flowers to offer to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata.

75.26 “Then when seven years had passed, the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata [F.377.a] arose from his meditative stability, and went to that place where the teaching seat had been laid out, and sat down, surrounded and accompanied by an assembly of many hundred thousands, and he taught the perfection of wisdom. {Va.259}

75.27 Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita and the merchant’s daughter, together with the five hundred maidens, offered flowers to the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata. When the great bodhisattva Sadāprarudita saw the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata, he attained the kind of bliss that is experienced when a monk with one-pointed attention is absorbed in the first meditative concentration.

75.28 “The explanation of the Dharma of the perfection of wisdom imparted to him by the bodhisattva great being Dharmodgata was as follows:

75.29 “ ‘One should know that the perfection of wisdom is (1) sameness owing to the sameness of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (2) voidness owing to the voidness of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (3) motionlessness owing to the motionlessness of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (4) the absence of mentation owing to the absence of mentation in all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (5) imperturbability owing to the imperturbability of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (6) of common savor owing to the common savor of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (7) infinitude owing to the infinitude of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (8) nonarising owing to the nonarising of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (9) nonceasing owing to the nonceasing of all phenomena. [F.377.b] The perfection of wisdom is (10) infinity owing to the infinity of space. The perfection of wisdom is (11) infinity owing to the infinity of the oceans. The perfection of wisdom is (12) multifaceted owing to multifacetedness like that of Mount Sumeru. The perfection of wisdom is (13) nonconceptualization owing to nonconceptualization like that of the sky. The perfection of wisdom is (14) boundlessness owing to the boundlessness of physical forms. Similarly, the perfection of wisdom is (15) boundlessness owing to the boundlessness of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness. The perfection of wisdom is (16) boundlessness owing to the boundlessness of the earth element. Similarly, the perfection of wisdom is (17) boundlessness owing to the boundlessness of the water element, the fire element, and the wind element. The perfection of wisdom is (18) boundlessness owing to the boundlessness of the space element. The perfection of wisdom is (19) sameness owing to the vajra-like sameness of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (20) irreducibility owing to the irreducibility of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (21) nonapprehensibility owing to the nonapprehensibility of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (22) nondifferentiation owing to the nondifferentiation of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (23) inactivity owing to the inactivity of all phenomena. The perfection of wisdom is (24) inconceivability owing to the inconceivability of all phenomena.'

“Then the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita sat down in the same manner, [F.378.a] and at that time he established certainty in (1) the meditative stability named sameness of all phenomena owing to the sameness of all phenomena. And when the perfection of wisdom was explained, he attained (2) the meditative stability named voidness of all phenomena, (3) the meditative stability named motionlessness of all phenomena, (4) the meditative stability named absence of mentation in all phenomena, (5) the meditative stability named imperturbability of all phenomena, (6) the meditative stability named common savor of all phenomena, (7) the meditative stability named infinite of all phenomena, (8) the meditative stability named nonarising of all phenomena, (9) the meditative stability named nonceasing of all phenomena, (10) the meditative stability named infinite space, (11) the meditative stability named infinite ocean, (12) the meditative stability named multifacetedness of Mount Sumeru, (13) the meditative stability named sky-like, (14) the meditative stability named boundlessness of physical forms, (15) the meditative stability named boundlessness of feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness, (16) the meditative stability named boundlessness of the earth element, (17) the meditative stability named boundlessness of the water element, the fire element, and the wind element, (18) the meditative stability named boundlessness of the space element, (19) the meditative stability named vajra-like, (20) the meditative stability named nondifferentiation of all phenomena, (21) the meditative stability named nonapprehensibility of the essential nature of all phenomena, (22) the meditative stability named sameness of the irreducibility of all phenomena, (23) the meditative stability named inactivity of all phenomena, and (24) the meditative stability named inconceivability of all phenomena. [F.378.b] Beginning with these [twenty-four], the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita altogether attained six million<sup>577</sup> gateways of meditative stability."

CHAPTER 76: ENTRUSTMENT

- 76.1 “Subhūti, immediately after the bodhisattva great being Sadāprarudita had attained those six million gateways of meditative stability, he saw the lord buddhas accompanied by hosts of bodhisattvas and surrounded by the community of monks, teaching this same perfection of wisdom, in these very ways, in these very terms, in these very words, and in these very letters, in the world systems of the great trichiliocosm of the ten directions—east, south, west, north, the intermediate directions, the zenith, and the nadir—numerous as the grains of sand of the river Gaṅgā, just as I, accompanied by hosts of bodhisattvas and surrounded by the community of monks, am now teaching the Dharma of the perfection of wisdom in these very ways, in these very terms, in these very words, and in these very letters, in this world system of the great trichiliocosm. By attaining inconceivable dhāraṇīs, he acquired learning as vast as the oceans. In all his lives he was never again separated from the buddhas. In all his lives, he was reborn in those world systems where the lord buddhas were present, and he listened to the Dharma in the actual presence of the lord buddhas. At the very least, even in his dreams [F.379.a] he was never separated from the vision of the buddhas. He would hear the Dharma and was never separated from the sight of bodhisattvas. He abandoned all states lacking freedom, and possessed the freedoms and opportunities.”
- 76.2 Then the Blessed One said to the venerable Ānanda, “You should know, Ānanda, as this formulation explains, that the perfection of wisdom facilitates the attainment of omniscient gnosis. Therefore, Ānanda, all bodhisattva great beings who want to attain omniscient gnosis should practice this perfection of wisdom.”
- 76.3 Then he said to Ānanda, “In order to benefit bodhisattva great beings, you, Ānanda, should take up this perfection of wisdom. Uphold it, recite it, master it, and teach it extensively to others. Ānanda, this perfection of wisdom should be heard, taken up, upheld, recited, mastered, chanted, taught, explained, repeated, and cultivated by bodhisattva great beings. Through the blessing of the tathāgatas, at the very least, it should be clearly written down, and offerings should be made to it with flowers, incense, perfume, garlands, unguents, powders, clothing, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, and many rows of butter lamps on all sides. It should be served, honored, venerated, worshiped, revered, and respected. This is my admonition. If you ask why, Ānanda, [F.379.b] it is because the unsurpassed, complete enlightenment of bodhisattva great beings depends on the perfection of wisdom. Ānanda, do you think that your teacher is the Tathāgata?"

"Blessed Lord, he is my teacher!" replied Ānanda.

76.4 The Blessed One then said to the venerable Ānanda, "The Tathāgata is your teacher, Ānanda! You have conducted yourself, Ānanda, with physical acts of loving kindness that are pleasant and never unpleasant, with verbal acts of loving kindness that are pleasant and never unpleasant, and with mental acts of loving kindness that are pleasant and never unpleasant. Therefore, Ānanda, just as you have acted with loving kindness, empathetic joy, and reverence toward me while I am alive in this present incarnation, after I have passed away, you should similarly act toward this perfection of wisdom. Ānanda, I entrust and transmit this to you for the second time and for the third time. Come what may, you should ensure that this perfection of wisdom does not vanish. Ānanda, as long as this perfection of wisdom remains in the world, you should know that for that long the tathāgatas will also be present. You should know that for that long the tathāgatas will teach the Dharma. Ānanda, you should know that those beings {Va.261} who listen to this perfection of wisdom, and who take up, uphold, recite, master, chant, teach, repeat, question, serve, honor, respect, worship, revere, and venerate it, presenting it with diverse offerings—flowers, incense, perfume, [F.380.a] garlands, unguents, clothing, powders, parasols, victory banners, ribbons, and rows of butter lamps on all sides—will never be separated from the sight of the buddhas. They will never be separated from hearing the Dharma.

76.5 "Ānanda, you should know that those beings will be the servants of the tathāgatas!"

76.6 When the Blessed One had joyfully spoken these words, the venerable Ānanda, the venerable Śāradvatīputra, the venerable Mahāmaudgalyāyana, the venerable Mahākāśyapa, the venerable Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, the venerable Mahākātyāyana, the venerable Aniruddha, the venerable Revata, the venerable Rāhula, and all four assemblies, along with mundane beings including gods, humans, and asuras, rejoiced in the words spoken by the Blessed One.

- 76.7 This completes the seventy-sixth chapter, "Entrustment," from "The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines."
- 76.8 This completes "The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines," which is the mother of the past, future, and present buddhas, bodhisattvas, śrāvakas, and pratyekabuddhas, in all the limitless world systems of the ten directions.

Colophon

c.1 It is said in the original Jangpa manuscript:

This [Tibetan translation of] The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines has been edited twice on the basis of the original “gold manuscript,” which had been [commissioned as] a commitment of the spiritual mentor Nyanggom Chobar, and it has also been edited on the basis of the manuscript kept at Yerpa. Since it is extant, scribes of posterity should copy [the text] according to this version alone.

In the [recast] version of The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines [Toh 3790] that was edited by master Haribhadra, and in some [other] manuscripts, the text ends with the seventy-first chapter entitled “Unchanging Reality.” In certain [other] manuscripts, including the original (phyi mo) [Toh 9], there are seventy-six chapters, with [F.380.b] the addition of the [seventy-second] chapter entitled “Distinctions in the Training of a Bodhisattva,” the [seventy-third] chapter entitled “The Attainment of the Manifold Gateways of Meditative Stability by the Bodhisattva Sadāprarudita,” the [seventy-fourth] chapter entitled “Sadāprarudita,” the [seventy-fifth] chapter entitled “Dharmodgata,” and the [seventy-sixth] chapter entitled “Entrustment.” This accords with earlier accounts and the authentic records of teachings received. Insofar as there are distinctions in the translation of these five later chapters, I have seen a few manuscripts where the terminology is slightly dissimilar, although there are no differences in meaning.

In general, throughout the present text there are all sorts of unique allusions and variations in the elaboration of the points that are expressed. In particular, in the chapter entitled “The Introductory Narrative,” there are some passages where the text corresponds to The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines.

OM SVĀSTI

- c.5 Respectfully served by Indra, mighty lord of the gods, and others,
The supreme guides, best of humankind, embodying the three buddha bodies,
Are supreme in liberation, the path of liberation, and the provisions—
Objects of homage for all embodied beings and lord protectors.<sup>578</sup>
- c.6 In the perspective of the divine path where emptiness and compassion are indivisible,
May the conquerors and their heirs again bestow excellent merits, Causing a downpour of nectar of spiritual and temporal well-being
From the dense accumulating clouds of enlightened activity!
- c.7 The supreme source of the marvelous attributes of existence and quiescence, Monarch of supreme eloquence who reigns over needs and wants,
Is a manifestly high support, like the pinnacle of a victory banner—
May this supreme support enhance the glory of the Buddhist teaching!<sup>579</sup>
- c.8 Although the sequences of the manifold vehicles are infinite
Owing to distinctions between disciples, who are low and high,
They are subsumed in the three definitive piṭakas,
Among which are the profound middle turning precepts Concerning the absence of defining characteristics.<sup>580</sup>
- c.9 Among these, the billion-line version extant in the domain of the gandharvas,
The ten-million-line version extant in the domain of Śatakratu,
And the hundred-thousand-line version extant in the domain of hooded nāgas
Were established as the long, middle-length, and abridged versions of the extensive text.
- c.10 The twenty-five-thousand-line, eighteen-thousand-line, and ten-thousand-line versions Are known as the long, middle-length, and abridged versions of the intermediate text.
Many scholars profess that the eight-thousand-line version and the verse summation
Are respectively the abridged and extremely abridged texts.
- c.11 Alternatively, the versions in one hundred thousand lines,
Twenty-five thousand lines, and eight thousand lines
Are respectively known as the long, medium, and short texts.
Among these, the long version fell as a downpour of kingly power, Inexhaustible as an offering lamp for living beings, without partiality.

- c.12 In order that the excellent merit of the teaching and living beings might yet again increase,
Lord [Tenpa Tsering], who bestows the good fortune of resources
For the sustenance of spacious Degé—
A great community endowed with the ten virtuous actions—Instantly opened countless doors of the inexhaustible treasure-store of space, Containing the gems of the twenty-five-thousand-line version—it was a wondrous springtime. [F.381.a]
- c.13 Acting in service of the entire teaching impartially, Stealing the pride of the mighty long-living [gods],
In the great palace of Lhundrubteng,
A seminary triumphant over all directions,
Bastion of the twofold tradition [of sūtra and tantra]
Enveloped by the white parasol of the glorious Sakya school,
During the water tiger year, also known as Śubhakarṭa,
At the time when the youthful face of the Jyeṣṭha moon made her appearance,
Her surface resembling translucent crystal,
He completed this task with two hundred and fifty elite [wood] carvers
Through the excellence of meritorious circumstances.
- c.14 By this virtuous action I dedicate merit
That king [Tenpa Tsering] might have a long life and stable rule, Sustaining the spacious kingdom with the bliss of the perfect age,
And that living beings, exemplified by those with auspicious connections, Might attain the rank of liberation, the four buddha bodies!
- c.15 At the time when the carving of the xylographs of this very text, along with those of the Multitude of the Buddhas (Buddhāvataṃsaka), was completed, in the presence of King Tenpa Tsering, the ruler of Degé, the beggar monk Tashi Wangchuk composed these verses at Sharkha Dzongsar Palace, where the wood-carving workshop was based. May they be victorious!
- c.16 *ye dharmā hetuprabhavā hetun teṣāṃ tathāgato bhavat āha teṣāṃ ca yo nirodho
evaṃ vādī mahāśramaṇaḥ [ye svāhā]* “Whatever events arise from causes, the Tathāgata has told of their causes, and the great ascetic has also taught their cessation.”

NOTES

- n.1 In Tibetan, as well as its official title as on our title page, it is also known by the shortened name Sherchin Nyitri Ngatong (sher phyin nyi khri lnga stong); or by the moniker Nyitri (nyi khri), which is sometimes misunderstood to mean “in twenty thousand lines,” but is instead simply an even more truncated version of the title. Another moniker sometimes used to indicate the source of a citation from it in Tibetan commentarial works is Yum Barma (yum bar ma), “the middle length ‘mother’ [sūtra],” and a similar moniker Yum Dringpo (yum ‘bring po), with the same meaning, is found in the Degé dkar chag. It should be noted, too, that the customary honorific “Noble” (‘phags pa, corresponding to Skt. ārya) is not appended to the title, nor to the colophon or chapter colophons, in any Kangyurs; nor is the text called a “sūtra” or “Mahāyāna sūtra.”
- n.2 See Gareth Sparham, trans., The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html>) (Toh 10), 2022.
- n.3 These numbers of volumes vary across different Kangyurs according to the density of the folios.
- n.4 See Butön chos ‘byung F.73.b, where Butön attributes as his sources Trophu Lotsāwa Jampa Pal (khro phu lo tsA ba byams pa dpal), Chim Jampé Yang (mchims ‘jam pa’i dbyangs), Chak Lotsāwa Drachom (chag lo tsA ba dgra bcom), and “some others.”
- n.5 That is, among the six “mother” Prajñāpāramitā sūtras (so called because they include all eight implicit topics of the Abhisamayālaṅkāra, see below), the five long sūtras (in one hundred thousand, twenty-five thousand, eighteen thousand, ten thousand, and eight thousand lines, Toh 8–12 (<https://read.84000.co/section/O1JC114941JC14665.html>)). The sixth “mother” is the Verse Summary (Ratnaguṇa-saṅcayagāthā, Toh 13), which is said to have been taught subsequently in the Magadha dialect.

- n.6 Some accounts place the occasion relatively late in the Buddha’s life, perhaps in his mid or late fifties, on the grounds that Subhūti, the leading arhat protagonist, according to some biographies, attained the state of arhat just after the Buddha had returned to the human world after his stay in the Trāyastriṃsa god realm to teach his mother; Subhūti, reflecting on impermanence, had decided to remain meditating in retreat instead of joining the crowd receiving the Buddha and was acknowledged by the Buddha as having been the first to have come to meet him. See n.72.
- n.7 See Butön chos ’byung F.73.b–74.a. The prophecy in question is the one for Gaṅgadevī, related in chapter 44 of the present text, chapter 43 of The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines (Toh 8), chapter 53 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-chapter-53>) of The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines (Toh 10), and chapter 19 of The Perfection of Wisdom in Eight Thousand Lines (Toh 12). It is not, however, found in The Perfection of Wisdom in Ten Thousand Lines (Toh 11).

- n.12 Since the longer texts are prose works, “line” (śloka) in this context is simply a unit of measure of thirty-two syllables, rather than implying a verse couplet as in some other contexts.
- n.13 According to Zacchetti (2015), p. 176, the mentions come in a list of Prajñāpāramitā scriptures at the beginning of the Jin’gang xian lun (金剛仙論, Taishō 1512 (<https://cbetaonline.dila.edu.tw/en/T1512>)).

In Sanskrit: (3) the Gilgit manuscript no. 24, in Gilgit/Bāmiyān type 1 rounded Gupta script. See Bongard-Levin and Hori (1996).
- n.16 Both were probably in Sanskrit, and it is known that one of the source texts (the one translated by Mokṣala, see below) was written in one of the Brāhmī-derived scripts that were by then becoming more widespread. In earlier centuries texts circulating in Khotan were often in Gāndhārī, written in Kharoṣṭhī script. See Salomon (2014), pp. 7–8.

- n.24 Zacchetti’s masterful, posthumously published study of the Dazhidu lun (Zacchetti 2021) explores the possible interactions of a limited set of elements of the commentary’s content with the expansion of the Long Sūtras in their Indic versions, while also pointing to the tendency of Mahāyāna texts to evolve by incorporating explanations from the oral commentarial tradition that accompanies their transmission.

- n.27 Zacchetti (2015), p. 190, citing Hikata (1958).
- n.28 The “Three Treatises” are Kumārajīva’s renderings of Nāgārjuna’s Mūlamadhyamakakārikā, a Madhyamaka text called the Bai lun (*Śataśāstra) attributed to Āryadeva, and a work on emptiness called the Shi’ermen lun (*Dvādaśamukhaśāstra) attributed to Nāgārjuna. However, the Dazhidu lun is often considered the fourth text of the corpus.
- n.29 The five texts are the Abhisamayālaṅkāra (Toh 3786), the Mahāyānasūtrālaṅkāra (Toh 4020), the Madhyāntavibhāga (Toh 4021), the Dharmadharmatāvibhāga (Toh 4023), and the Ratnagoṭravibhāgotataratantraśāstra (Toh 4024). Asaṅga’s numerous works also include important texts of which Maitreya’s direct authorship is not claimed, such as the Abhidharmasamuccaya, the Yogācārabhūmiśāstra corpus, the Mahāyānasamgraha, and several sūtra commentaries. Authorship statements of the “Five Teachings of Maitreya” refer to Maitreya using the ubiquitous epithet nātha (Tib. mgon po), “Lord” or “Protector,” and some modern scholars have assumed that there must have been a human teacher called Maitreya-nātha from whom Asaṅga received them, simply on the basis that nonhuman teachers do not exist. While no such assumption has any basis in the traditional accounts, it is true that the traditional accounts themselves are of uncertain, if ancient, provenance. They do not seem to have been written down in any Indic language, nor in Tibetan before the eleventh or twelfth century. If it is presumed that they accompanied the texts of the corpus in oral form as they were transmitted to Tibet (at different periods), it remains uncertain which particular texts they accompanied. Nonetheless there are mentions in Vasubandhu’s works of the double authorship of at least one of the texts, and in other Sanskrit works of the five texts as a whole. Chinese tradition, with mentions dating as early as the sixth century, agrees that Asaṅga received certain texts from Maitreya, but includes among them the Yogācārabhūmiśāstra corpus, excludes the Ratnagoṭravibhāga (which it attributes to a Sāramati), and omits both the Dharmadharmatāvibhāga and the Abhisamayālaṅkāra, neither of which were known in China.
- n.30 Thirteen if a lost commentary said (from some interpretations of a statement by Haribhadra) to have been written by Asaṅga, and possibly called the Tattvaviniścaya, is included (see Kongtrul book 3, Ngawang Zangpo 2010, p. 257; Tāranātha’s History in Chimpa et al 1980, p. 161; and Brunnhölzl 2010, vol. 1, p. 695 n103); fourteen if the Tengyur version of The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines (Toh 3790) is included. Although the latter is sometimes described as a commentary and attributed to Haribhadra, it is really a version of the sūtra, slightly edited and with some passages reordered, with inserted mentions of the Ornament's structural outline. See i-35–i.39 below.

- n.31 But see n.24.
- n.32 Nevertheless, of the “four great cahariot traditions of interpretation” (shing rta chen po'i srol bzhi) into which it divides Prajñāpāramitā commentarial works, the catalog (dkar chag) of the Degé Tengyur (F.432.b) classifies Nāgārjuna's works on reasoning (rigs pa'i tshogs) as the second, even if at that point instead of listing them it simply contains a reference to the Madhyamaka section. See also n.42.
- n.33 One of the two texts mentioned, The Long Explanation of the Noble Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand, Twenty-Five Thousand, and Eighteen Thousand Lines (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh3808.html>) (Toh 3808), also known as the “longer” Bṛhaṭṭikā, just the Bṛhaṭṭikā, Paddhati, gzhung 'grel, or yum gsum gnod 'joms, is attributed variously to Vasubandhu and to Daṃṣṭrāsena; as its full title makes clear it comments on all three of the long sūtras. The other, The Long Explanation of the Noble Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines (Toh 3807), also known as the “shorter” Bṛhaṭṭikā, the 'bum kyi gnod 'joms or gnod 'joms chung ba, is attributed mostly to Daṃṣṭrāsena, and even the Tibetan king Tri Songdetsen; it comments on The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines alone. For a recently published English translation of the first, see Sparham (2022b), and for details of both see Sparham's introduction, i.1 and Brunnhölzl (2010), vol. 1, pp. 42 and 692–94 n99. Other Prajñāpāramitā treatises composed without reference to the topics of The Ornament of Clear Realization may include, somewhat doubtfully, a lost commentary thought by some to have been written by Asaṅga himself (see Obermiller 1999 p. 10 and n7).
- n.34 See, for example, Kongtrul book 3, pp. 258–59, and the account in Tendar Lharampa's Heart Sūtra commentary translated in Lopez (1988), p. 145.
- n.35 See Denkarma F.295.a.3 and Phangthangma, p. 2.
- n.36 See Denkarma F.305.a.6 and Herrmann-Pfandt, pp. 294–97.
- n.37 One reading of the ambiguous entries in the Denkarma that Herrmann-Pfandt numbers 516A would suggest an early translation of Haribhadra's Āloka (or rgyan snang, Toh 3791), a commentary that applies The Ornament of Clear Realization to The Perfection of Wisdom in Eight Thousand Lines, while entry 517 is his Vṛtti or Vivṛti (don gsal, Toh 3793).
- n.38 The Samcayagāthāpañjikā (Toh 3798).

- n.39 Ngok Lotsāwa Loden Sherab (rngog lo tsA ba blo ldan shes rab, 1059–1110), one of the principal founding figures of the Tibetan scholastic tradition, who spent seventeen years in Kashmir and in Nepal.
- n.40 Sangphu Neuthok (gsang phu ne'u thog) was an important study center of the early Kadampa tradition, founded in 1073 by Ngok Lekpai Sherab (rngog legs pa'i shes rab), uncle of Ngok Loden Sherab.
- n.41 See Brunnhölzl (2010), vol. 1, pp. 68–69.
- n.42 Tibetan authors speak of four great “chariot” traditions (shing rta chen po'i srol bzhi), as in the Tengyur dkar chag F.431.a, of commentary on the Prajñāpāramitā. The first is that of The Ornament of Clear Realization, the third that of the two bṛhaṭṭika commentaries, and the fourth that of Dignāga’s Yogācāra-based explanations. The second of the four, however, is essentially the entirety of Nāgārjuna’s reasoning on emptiness that forms the Madhyamaka tradition. Thus although Prajñāpāramitā studies as such were and are, in Tibet, focused almost entirely on the The Ornament of Clear Realization, the influence of the Prajñāpāramitā in the form of the much more widely studied Madhyamaka system has been very far reaching. See also i.25 above, and n.-32.
- n.43 The two Hemis Kangyurs are alone in adding that the translators were “Zhang Yeshé Dé and others, in the time of me khri srid sde btsan” (Hemis I) and “... time of mes khri srong (?Inga) btsan” (Hemis II). These possibly corrupted spellings, although they do not correspond to the usual names of the Tibetan kings of the period, may perhaps refer to the king Tridé Songtsen (khri sde srong btsan), also known as Senalek (sad na legs), who reigned 800–815 CE.
- n.44 Unequivocal confirmation of the Tibetan translators responsible for surviving versions of The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines is incomplete. The recorded details of its early translations are nevertheless quite complex. The versions in the Degé and most other Kangyurs (which differ among each other in several respects) lack a translators’ colophon, but those in the Narthang and Lhasa Kangyurs have colophons that name Jinamitra, Surendrabodhi, Yeshé Dé, “and others” as responsible. The Degé catalog (dkar chag) affirms that the sūtra was translated in the early period as well as mentioning the additions made later by Ngok Lotsāwa. Traditional histories mention more than one early translation, by Lang Khampa Gocha (rlangs khams pa go cha); by Wé Mañjuśrī (dbas ma.ny+ju shrI) and Nyang Indrawaro (nyang indra wa ro); a version with all repetitions in full made by Vairotsana (pa gor vai ro tsa na); and a revised version made during the reign of Ralpachen by Surendrabodhi, Kawa Paltsek (ka ba dpal brtseg), and Chokro Lu'i Gyaltzen (cok ro klu'i rgyal mtshan). See Kongtrul book 3 in Ngawang Zangpo (2010), pp. 258–59. A more complete discussion will be included with 84000's forthcoming translation of The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines.

- n.45 See Sparham trans., The Perfection of Wisdom in Eighteen Thousand Lines (<https://read.84000.co/translation/UT22084-029-001.html>) (Toh 10). A colophon attributing the translation to Jinamitra, Surendrabodhi, Yeshé Dé, and others appears in the Stok Palace, Ulaanbaatar, and Phukdrak Kangyurs but not in the Degé or other Kangyurs, while a similar colophon in the Hemis and Gangteng Kangyurs lists Prajñāvarman in the place of Surendrabodhi.
- n.46 Conze mentions the possibility that the lineage of such a Sanskrit manuscript may extend back to the fifth century when, according to Tāranātha's History, Ārya Vimuktisena found discrepancies between the sūtra and The Ornament of Clear Realization, but had his doubts resolved when, following the instructions of Maitreya in a dream, he met the upāsaka Śāntivarman in Vārāṇasī and obtained from him a version of The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines that Śāntivarman had brought from South India and that corresponded with the order of the Ornament. See Conze (1978), p. 37, and Tāranātha's History in Chimpa et al, p. 189.
- n.47 Conze (1975), pp. 37–38, provides a brief summary of the principal differences between the texts. Lethcoe (1976) compares part of the “revised” Sanskrit text and the Ornament itself with the “unrevised” Chinese translations, but without reference to either Tibetan version. Zacchetti (2015) notes that a comparative study is also to be found in Watanabe (1994), but we have not yet been able to consult that article.
- n.48 See Zacchetti (2015), p. 188.
- n.49 See Degé Tengyur vol. 84 (shes phyin, ca), F.342.a.
- n.50 The Degé catalog entry for The Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines states that Ngok Lotsāwa made some revisions to the early translation of that text (i.e., in the late eleventh century) based on a Sanskrit manuscript kept in a temple in Phamting (Pharping) in Nepal. The revisions he made are not all listed but include the names of three meditative stabilities (samādhi) that he added to the list in chapter 8. Two of those meditative stabilities are listed in the present text of The Perfection of Wisdom in Twenty-Five Thousand Lines, so it may possibly be that this text, too, bears traces of some later revisions. On the other hand, the lists of meditative stabilities are anyway not identical between the two texts, whether in number or content, so no solid conclusion can be reached on this basis.

- n.59 The sole exception being that chapter 56 corresponds to two chapters, 56 and 57, in the longer text.
- n.60 The colophon of the present Degé Kangyur version (while not clear on this point) suggests that these chapters may perhaps have been absent, too, from some early manuscripts. It does nevertheless state that they were included in the “original” (phyi mo), presumably referring to the Sanskrit from which the earliest translation was made. The Degé catalog (F.117.a.5–6) for the Hundred Thousand mentions that when Nāgārjuna brought the text from the nāga realm, the Maitreya chapter and these other final chapters were missing from the text because the nāgas had withheld them from him, but that there was a tradition for some versions of the text (though not in the Degé) of adding them, as a supplement from the Twenty-Five Thousand and the Eight Thousand.
- n.61 The three approaches provide much of the framework for the commentary on the three long sūtras, The Long Explanation of the Noble Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand, Twenty-Five Thousand, and Eighteen Thousand Lines (Toh 3808). A very brief summary is given here but for more details see Sparham (2022b), i.46. The term “three approaches” is also applied in other commentaries, e.g. Haribhadra’s Abhisamayālaṅkāraloka (Toh 3791), to the sūtras being of three different lengths; see Brunnhölzl (2010), vol. 1 p. 35.
- n.62 See Sparham (2022b), i.50.

- n.63 See Sparham (2022b), 2.17 and n.248.
- n.64 Kimura’s Sanskrit edition is divided into eight sections corresponding to the eight topics, as is the Tibetan “eight-chapter” Tengyur version. See Introduction i.41 above.
- n.65 It should be noted that only the three long sūtras start with the Buddha’s statement to Śāriputra and the subsequent teaching to him (and in the Ten Thousand, Toh 11, the same material prompted by an initial question from Śāriputra). In contrast, in the Eight Thousand, Toh 12, the Buddha’s request to Subhūti is the initial passage and the briefer equivalent of the Śāriputra chapter only comes afterward.
- n.66 The distinction is found in Pali in the Aṅguttaranikāya (AN 1.89) and in Sanskrit and Tibetan in several Mahāyāna sūtras including the Śūraṅgamasamādhisūtra (Toh 132, Degé Kangyur vol. 55, mdo sde, da, F.305.b). Detailed accounts of how Śāriputra became a disciple of the Buddha are to be found in The Chapter on Going Forth (Toh 1-1) and The Ratnaketu Dhāranī (Toh 138). Interestingly, The Chapter on Going Forth (1.401) adds a “foremost” distinction that we have not identified elsewhere, that of being foremost among those with great pratibhāna (“confidence” or “inspired speech”).
- n.67 See Lamotte 2001, p. 508.
- n.68 The Eight Thousand (Toh 12), in contrast, starts with the Buddha’s request to Subhūti. See n.65.
- n.69 The second of these distinctions is mentioned in the present sūtra (4.23, 6.30). Both distinctions are found in Pali in the Aṅguttaranikāya (AN 1.201–2) and in Sanskrit and Tibetan in several Mahāyāna sūtras including the Śūraṅgamasamādhisūtra (Toh 132, Degé Kangyur vol. 55, mdo sde, da, F.305.b). The first of the two is dakṣineyānām agryaḥ in Sanskrit, and the second usually araṇyavihāriṇām agryaḥ, rendered in Tibetan (Mvy 6366) as nyon mongs pa med par gnas pa rnams kyi mchog, “foremost among those dwelling free of afflicted mental states,” but also sometimes araṇyavihāriṇām agryaḥ, interpreted as “dwelling in seclusion.”
- n.70 Ekottarāgama (Taishō 125) and other works detailed in Lamotte 1962, p. 155 n27.
- n.71 The Majjhimanikāya (MN 139) mentions his dwelling in nonconflict at the end of an explanation of that topic. He and his nephew Saddha are mentioned in the Aṅguttaranikāya (AN 11.14); and his meditation is commended by the Buddha in the Udāna (Ud 6.7). The Theragāthā (1.1) contains a verse on him that is said to refer to his practicing in retreat in Rājagṛha, and the prose legend associated with it in Dhammapāla's commentary, the Paramatthadīpani (see Rhys Davids 1913, pp. 1–6), states that he was the younger brother of the benefactor Anāthapiṇḍada, that he was inspired to go forth during the dedication of the Jetavana presented to the Buddha by his brother, and that he attained the state of arhat through the practice of loving kindness. The legend also includes the story of how King Bimbisara promised him a hermitage but then forgot to build it, causing a drought since the gods did not want to let him suffer in the open as he meditated.

- n.72 The story is in the Vinayaḥṣudrakavastu (Toh 6, Degé Kangyur vol. 11, 'dul ba, da, F.92.a), and relates the story of Subhūti remaining in meditative seclusion in Rājagṛha instead of coming to greet the Buddha in Sāṃkāśya on his descent from Trāyastriṃśa. The narrative is reproduced in the Dazhidu lun 137a (see Lamotte 2001, pp. 208, et seq.) and is also mentioned in Lamotte 1962, p. 155 n27; it appears in abridged form in Tāranātha's biography of the Buddha compiled from Vinaya sources. But see also n.77.
- n.75 See The White Lotus of the Good Dharma (Toh 113), chapter 6.
- n.76 As in The Prophecy Concerning Strīvivarta (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh190.html>) (Toh 190), most of which comprises a discussion between the bodhisattva Strīvivarta and Subhūti, drawing on the latter's two characterizations as a worthy recipient of offerings and a specialist in the profound; and in Subhūti's reasons for not wishing to call on Vimalakīrti in chapter 3 of The Teaching of Vimalakīrti (Toh 176), drawing on his role as a recipient of offerings.
- n.77 The stories in Pali commentaries (and alluded to in some Kangyur texts, too) that outline Subhūti's other distinction, of being "foremost among those worthy of receiving offerings," relate that when on his alms round he would stop outside each house and meditate deeply and at length on loving kindness for the householder before receiving any donation of food. This other detail, according to which—even in a quite different area than his unceasing pursuit of emptiness and the ultimate view—it is again apparent that he is uncompromisingly ready to take the Buddha’s teachings to their utmost limits, nicely rounds out what we can glean of his personal character.

- n.79 The unique feature of The Perfection of Wisdom in Ten Thousand Lines (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh11.html>) (Toh 11) is that the lists of dharmas are all gathered into the first two chapters, as well as appearing again scattered throughout the sūtra; see Padmakara Translation Group (2018). In all other versions of the long sūtras, they have to be sought individually.

- n.89 In this text, we have opted to translate the epithet bhagavat (bcom ldan ’das) as “the Blessed One” when it stands alone in narrative contexts, and as “Lord” when found in dialogue, as in the vocative expressions “Blessed Lord”

(bhadantabhagavan, [btsun pa] bcom ldan 'das) and "Lord Buddha" (bhagavanbuddha, sangs rgyas bcom ldan 'das).

- n.90 bka' yang dag pas, here and in the Hundred Thousand, is one Tibetan rendering in the canonical texts of Skt. samyagājñā, the other being the more widespread yang dag pa'i shes pas ("by perfect understanding"), as in the equivalent phrase in the Eighteen Thousand, 1.2 and as recommended in Mahāvvyutpatti 1087. See also The Jewel Cloud (Toh 231), 1.2 and n.21.
- n.91 Full explanations of the introductory passage can be found in The Long Explanation (Toh 3808), 1.3. An interpretation of the corresponding introductory paragraph in The Perfection of Wisdom in Eight Thousand Lines (Aṣṭasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitā) can also be found in Haribhadra's Mirror Commentary on the Ornament of Clear Realization (Abhisamayālaṅkāralokā). See Sparham 2006: I, pp. 171–81.
- n.92 The Tengyur version of the sūtra, instead of grangs med pa, here reads koṭī-niyutaśatasahasra (bye ba khrag khrig brgya stong), "one hundred billion trillion."
- n.93 The various dhāraṇīs are enumerated below at 9.44 and in Dutt 1934: pp. 212–13; also Conze 1975: pp. 160–62. Of the meditative stabilities, there are three enumerations in the present text, respectively comprising 32 (4.5), 119 (6.20) and 119 (8.247) meditative stabilities. On the implications and importance of dhāraṇī for the oral transmission of Buddhist teachings, see Davidson (2009): 97–147. The dhāraṇī gateways and gateways of meditative stability are also discussed in Lamotte's Treatise, vol. IV, pp. 1522–42.
- n.94 kṣāntisamatāpratīlabdha (Dutt 1934, p. 4); the Tengyur version of the sūtra, instead of chos thams cad la mnyam pa nyid kyi bzod pa rab tu thob pa, reads this as chos thams cad la mnyam pa nyid kyi bzod pa rab tu thob pa, which could be interpreted as "acceptance due to the sameness of all phenomena."
- n.95 "The dhāraṇī of nonattachment" is not present in the equivalent passage of the Hundred Thousand.
- n.96 This phrase is absent from the Tengyur version of the sūtra. Of the six extrasensory powers enumerated below at 2.234, the first five are meant here (as specified in the Ten Thousand) since these are the ones attainable by bodhisattvas, pratyekabuddhas, śrāvakas, and even by non-Buddhists, whereas the sixth is indicative of the termination of all rebirth in cyclic existence and can therefore be attained only by consummate buddhas.
- n.97 Engaging speech (śravaṇīyapada, mnyan par 'os pa'i tshig). The Ten Thousand, F.1.b (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh11.html#UT22084-031-002-4749>), reads gzung ba'i tshig (grahaṇapada), which implies either “captivating speech” or “comprehensible speech,” in contrast to gzung ba med pa'i tshig (agrahaṇapada) or “incomprehensible speech.” See Negi 1993–2005: p. 5505.

- n.98 These last few phrases, from “they had overcome” to “remained undefeated,” do not appear in the Tengyur version of the sūtra but are in the Tibetan and Sanskrit of the Hundred Thousand.
- n.99 sngon du smra ba, Skt. (Dutt 1934: p. 3) pūrvālāpin, literally “earliest to speak.” The Hundred Thousand has the equivalent thog mar smra ba, and in the Ten Thousand and other sūtras the same term is rendered gsong por smra ba, meaning “straightforward or honest speech.”
- n.100 The ambiguity of the translation here is intentional as there are several ways in which this sentence may be interpreted.
- n.101 Here and in the Hundred Thousand, the Degé reads shes pa phra ba, whereas the Ten Thousand has phra ba mkhyen pa. The Long Explanation (Toh 3808, 1.123) here lists various aspects of this “subtle knowledge” or “knowledge that engages in subtlety” (which it renders as ye shes phra ba) with regard to conduct and so forth. These include the knowledge that engages with subtle transmigration at the time of death, the knowledge that engages with subtle processes of rebirth, and the knowledge that engages with subtle buddha activities—emanation, renunciation, consummate enlightenment, turning the wheel of the Dharma, consecrating the lifespan, passing into final nirvāṇa, etc.
- n.102 Degé, Stok Palace, and other Kangyurs, not only here but also in the equivalent passages of the Tengyur version and of the Hundred Thousand, all read brten pa (which could be taken as “dependence” in relation to the following phrase, or perhaps interpreted as “the basis”) but Urga reads bden pa (“truth”). The Sanskrit is missing in the Dutt and Kimura editions, which offer an abbreviated version of these initial paragraphs, but the Sanskrit of the Gilgit manuscript (Zacchetti, p. 367) and the Hundred Thousand (Ghoṣa, p. 5) both read pratītyanirdeśakuśalair.
- n.103 Guhagupta (skyob sbed, sometimes found as Guhyagupta) is found here (but not in Dutt 1934: p. 5), as well as in the Hundred Thousand (ka F.3.a). By contrast the Ten Thousand 1.6 (ga F.2.a) reads Grahadatta (gzas byin). The Tibetan rendering of Guhagupta in the Eighteen Thousand 1.2 (ka F.2.b) is phug sbas).

- n.104 For all the parts of the body mentioned in this paragraph, the Tibetan reads 'od zer bye ba khrag khrig brgya stong drug cu drug cu. We have interpreted the repeated drug cu ("sixty") as signifying that sets of that number of rays of light are emitted from each one of the paired parts of his body or individual members in a list. This is consistent with the expanded version of the same passage in the Hundred Thousand, in which the number of light rays is repeated for each individual mention; in the case of nonpaired, single items like the śrīvatsa, throat, and uṣṇīṣa, the Tibetan of the Degé only has one drug cu.
- n.105 The set of exclamations that follow here is condensed by comparison with the equivalent passage in the Hundred Thousand in which it appears twice, with the explanation that the second time it is repeated by the buddhas in the respective buddhafi elds. This accords with Dutt 1934: p. 10, line 6: anyabuddhakṣetrasthā buddhā bhagavanta evamudāyanayanti sma.
- n.106 Dutt 1934: p. 10, line 7: (dge'o).
- n.107 This reading of bden pa ("truth") accords with the Degé, Urga, and Stok Palace Kangyurs here and in the Hundred Thousand, but the Yongle, Lithang, Kangxi, Narthang, Choné, and Lhasa Kangyurs all read dben pa ("isolation" or "withdrawal"). The Sanskrit and Tengyur versions do not have a directly comparable list of all the terms here.
- n.108 Dutt 11 reads ābhāsvarā, as do Ghoṣa 21 and Kimura 1–1:6. Here and elsewhere throughout the text, the Tibetan kun snang dang ba is used instead of the much more frequent 'od gsal for Ābhāsvara, the third of the three divisions of the gods of the second meditative concentration in the realm of form. kun snang dang ba is also used for Ābhāsvara in the Gaṇḍavyūha (ch 45 of Toh 44, the Buddhāvataṃsaka); see Roberts and Bower (2021), The Stem Array (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh44-45.html#UT22084-037-007-7394>). dang ba is perhaps gdangs for svara. That the order here and in two other places is unusual is corroborated by in Lamotte 2001 (Treatise, English translation), pp. 409-412.
- n.109 This is the "brief teaching," first of the "three approaches" (sgo gsum). See i- 58.
- n.110 This single paragraph summary is the subject of extremely detailed commentary in chapters 16–30 of the Dazhidu lun (**Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra*, Taishō 1509), attributed to Nāgārjuna. See Lamotte (2001), vol. 2.

- n.111 At this point, the Tengyur version of the sūtra (Degé Tengyur, Toh 3790, vol. 82, F.26.a) and the recast Sanskrit manuscript (Dutt 1934: p. 18) add an extra passage detailing the bodhisattva's aspirations for beings, such that the present paragraph is found in the Tengyur version from F.26.b.7 onward and in Dutt 1934: pp. 19–20.
- n.112 In place of the recollection of disillusionment (udvegānusmṛti, skyo ba rjes su dran pa), other lists of the ten recollections, including the one in the Ten Thousand (1.36), have the recollection of quiescence ([vy]lupaśamānusmṛti, nye bar zhi ba rjes su dran pa), i.e., the quiescence of nirvāṇa, on which see Konow 1941: p. 23; also Bodhi 1993: pp. 333–36.
- n.113 The faculties endowed with the knowledge of all phenomena (ājñātāvīndriya) are rendered here as kun shes pa rig pa'i dbang po, rather than kun shes pa dang ldan pa'i dbang po as in the Ten Thousand and Eighteen Thousand.
- n.114 The sense fields of complete suffusion (kṛtsnāyatana) are here rendered as chub pa'i skye mched, rather than the more usual zad par gyi skye mched as in the Ten Thousand and Eighteen Thousand.
- n.115 The Tengyur version of the sūtra inserts an extra phrase at the beginning of each mention in this paragraph of the six perfections, e.g. here for generosity: "... wish to establish miserly beings in generosity and ...". Similarly for discipline—"... wish to establish undisciplined beings in discipline and ..."—and so forth for the others in the same pattern.
- n.116 The reasons for bodhisattvas wishing to receive the praises of buddhas are set out in the Dazhidu lun, chapter 47; see Lamotte vol. 4, pp. 1620–25.
- n.117 sems bskyed pa gcig gis. In other instances in the text sems bskyed pa (cittotpāda) has been interpreted as an abbreviated form of byang chub kyi sems bskyed pa, and thus this phrase is rendered "with a single setting of the mind on enlightenment," but in the present context it seems more likely to mean simply "just by having the thought [of journeying to the buddhafiels]."
- n.118 This paragraph is explained in the Dazhidu lun, chapter 47; see Lamotte vol. 4, pp. 1626–28.
- n.119 This paragraph is explained in the Dazhidu lun, chapter 47; see Lamotte vol. 4, pp. 1628–30.
- n.120 byang chub sems dpa'i rigs yongs su bsgrubs par 'dod pa. Here the Stok Palace Kangyur reads byang chub sems dpa'i rigs yongs su bsrung bar 'dod pa, "wishes to protect the family of bodhisattvas,” (ka, F.41.a) as does the Hundred Thousand (Degé Kangyur vol. 14, F.48.b; see ).

- n.121 The equivalents of this paragraph in the Chinese translations of both Dharmarakṣa (Taishō 222) and Kumārajīva (Taishō 223) focus on the continuity of the buddhafiels, but with similar implications (see Zacchetti 2005, p. 295 and p. 296, note 412), and are explained in the Dazhidu lun, chapter 47; see Lamotte vol. 4, pp. 1628–35.
- n.122 This important paragraph on the eighteen kinds of emptiness is explained in considerable detail in the Long Explanation (Toh 3808, 4.103), and is contextualized by Lamotte as well as explained in very extensive detail in the Dazhidu lun, chapter 48; see Lamotte vol. 4, pp. 1636–767. See also Zacchetti 2005, pp. 296–99. Among many mentions of these kinds of emptiness in this text, one later list at 8.224 is followed by further statements about each.
- n.123 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 18.
- n.124 Here and in the Hundred Thousand (ka, F.55.b) the equivalent passages read rgyal rigs che zhing mtho ba, with the equivalent for the other two classes. In the Eighteen Thousand 2.27 (ka, F.16.a) and in the Tengyur version of the Twenty-Five Thousand (ga, F.30.b), the equivalent passages instead have rigs shing sa la chen po lta bu (“like a great sāla tree”). Dutt 1934: p. 25 has kṣatriya-mahāśālakula (etc.) and the two different Tibetan renderings of what was almost certainly the same Sanskrit term demonstrate the interpretative and literal approaches to a standard simile.
- n.125 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 24.
- n.126 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 25.
- n.127 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 26.
- n.128 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 26.
- n.129 The verbs in this phrase, gnas (stand, dwell, or remain) in the Degé Kangyur, are forms of gnon pa (step or step upon) in the Stok Palace, Yongle, Narthang, and Lhasa Kangyurs, as they are also in the equivalent passage of the Hundred Thousand. The translation here conforms to this latter reading.
- n.130 Some of these large numbers are specifically quantified in the Treasury of Abhidharma (Abhidharmakośa): grangs med pa at ten to the power of fifty-one, tshad med pa at ten to the power of fifty-two, gzhal du med pa at ten to the power of fifty-seven, bsam gyis mi khyab pa at ten to the power of fifty-eight, and brjod du med pa at ten to the power of fifty-nine.

- n.131 At this point in the Eighteen Thousand the second chapter ends.
- n.132 According to the two Bṛhaṭṭīkā commentaries (Toh 3807; Toh 3808, 4.259) the seven emptinesses (saptaśūnyatā, stong pa nyid bdun po) are the emptinesses of the seven separate groups mentioned in the preceding passage—aggregates, sensory elements, sense fields, truths, dependent origination, all conditioned phenomena, and all unconditioned phenomena (or, alternatively for the last two, all phenomena, and then all conditioned and unconditioned phenomena). This set of seven aspects of emptiness is not to be confused with another set enumerated in the Laṅkāvatārasūtra and to be found in Nordrang Orgyan 2008: pp. 1649–50.
- n.133 The phrase in both the Twenty-Five Thousand and Hundred Thousand is lhan cig kun tu rgyu, literally “move around together.” In the “eight-chapter” Tengyur version of the Twenty-Five Thousand, the Skt. samavasāraṭi is rendered in Tibetan as yang dag par 'du ba, literally “come together.”
- n.134 Compare the adaptation of this and the following paragraphs in the renowned Prajñāpāramitāhṛdaya (The Heart of the Perfection of Wisdom), Toh 21, 1.6 (Dharmachakra Translation Committee 2022).
- n.135 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 44.
- n.136 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 44.
- n.137 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 44.
- n.138 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 44.
- n.139 The individual statements introduced in this paragraph and then summarized in this last sentence are set out in full in the Hundred Thousand and fill 38 folios (ka F.113.b–150.b).
- n.140 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 66.
- n.141 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 72.
- n.142 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 65.
- n.143 This paragraph is found in Dutt 1934: p. 66.
- n.144 This is omitted in the Tibetan, but found in Dutt 1934: p. 83, line 15: udakamāpi kāyāt prasūñcati taḍ yathāpi nāma mahāmegha.

- n.145 This expression is omitted in Dutt 1934: p. 86, line 9.
- n.146 For “indications” (sanirdeśam), Degé reads ngan rtags, while the variant reading found in the Yongle and Peking (KPD, vol. 26, note 2) suggests don rtags.
- n.147 Degé and other Kangyurs here read thugs su byon cing dben par bya ba (or, less honorific in the next sentence, yid du 'ong zhing dben par bya ba). Dutt 1934: p. 90 line 14 reads priyo bhavati manaāpas ca, and this is followed by Conze 1975: p. 83, “dear and pleasing.” It is therefore quite possible that dben pa (“set apart,” “isolated”) should be read dpen pa (“useful,” “pleasing”) but there seems to be no Kangyur with this reading.
- n.148 Dutt 1934: p. 91, line 6, and throughout this and the following paragraph, suggests that these were nuns (bhikṣuṇī, dge slong ma) rather than monks. Conze 1975: p. 83 concurs.
- n.149 The corresponding Sanskrit is found in Dutt 1934: pp. 93–94.
- n.150 Our text reads la, but Dutt 1934, p. 98, line 6 suggests the genitive.
- n.151 The Tibetan text here and in the next two instances of this recurring statement reads btags pa'i chos, which we have rendered “something that is a designation.” In other contexts this term could be understood to refer instead to the thing or dharma that is designated. However, starting from 3.9, the term used in the rest of the instances in this passage is chos su btags pa, which we have rendered “a designation for something.” The meaning seems intended to be the same and both Tibetan terms are matched in the Sanskrit by dharmaprajñapti.
- n.152 chos su btags pa; see n.151.
- n.153 The Buddha’s statement here concludes his first response to the question put by Subhūti at the end of 3.4.
- n.154 See 3.4, when Subhūti asks his opening questions.
- n.155 In all cases in this paragraph the emphatic particle yang is not translated.
- n.156 The Degé here reads ma mchis pa. However, Yongle, Peking, Urga, and Lhasa (KPD 26: p. 237, line 1) read mchis pa. This construction is missing in Dutt 1934: pp. 112–13, which instead mentions the “real nature” (tathatā, de kho na nyid) of physical forms etc.

- n.157 This refers back to Subhūti's original question at the beginning of the chapter; see 3.4.
- n.158 In the Tibetan corresponding to this paragraph, both for this text and the Hundred Thousand (Degé Kangyur vol. 14, F.308.a) the many instances of Sanskrit dhātu have been translated as the Tibetan dbyings, rather than khams as would be much more usual in the context of the basic constituents of a sentient being including the sensory elements, etc. We have nevertheless interpreted chos kyi dbyings (dharmadhātu) in this passage as referring to the sensory element of mental phenomena rather than to the "realm of phenomena" in its wider sense; see the glossary definition for "realm of phenomena." It is not clear why the Tibetan translators preferred the dbyings terminology here.
- n.159 The last two are reversed in the Degé F.119.a–b.
- n.160 Degé here reads mnyam pa med pa for nyams pa med pa, but see Dutt 1934: p. 118, line 4.
- n.161 This is an extremely abbreviated listing of only 32 meditative stabilities, as found in Dutt 1934: pp. 117–18. The two longer enumerations of 119 meditative stabilities are found below, 6.20 and 8.247, corresponding to Dutt 1934: pp. 142–44 and pp. 198–203. In the present abbreviated list, there are a number of divergences from the two longer lists.
- n.162 See also Conze 1975: p. 97, and the interpretation in Sparham 2006 I: p. 57.
- n.163 See Conze 1975: p. 98, note 9.
- n.164 Subhūti's question here, compared to his original question to the Buddha at the beginning of chapter 3 (3.4), is rephrased with less reference to designation, even though the "naming" of dharmas continues to be an important element in the passage that follows. Note also that the Eighteen Thousand and Hundred Thousand, as well as the Sanskrit (Dt.123) and the Tengyur version of the sūtra (Toh 3790 vol.82, F.129.a) both include at this point an additional question: "Blessed Lord, I do not apprehend, do not find, and do not observe an entity (vastu, dngos po). Blessed Lord, since I do not apprehend, do not find, and do not observe an entity, to what phenomenon (dharma, chos) should I give teaching and instruction, and about what phenomena?"
- n.165 These three terms, which are repeated in the passage that follows, we have tentatively translated according to the Tibetan (gnas pa ma mchis/ thug pa ma mchis/ byin gyis brlabs pa ma mchis). In the Sanskrit (Drt.124) there are four terms (na sthitaṃ nāsthitaṃ na viṣṭhitaṃ nāviṣṭhitaṃ and in the Tengyur version of the sūtra (Toh 3790 vol.82, F.129.a), these are rendered gnas pa ma lags/ mi gnas pa ma lags/ gnas pa dang bral ba ma lags/ gnas pa dang bral ba ma lags pa ma lags, “not having a location, not lacking a location, not devoid of a location, and not not devoid of a location.” The terms sthita and gnas pa could also be translated as “abiding” or “remaining” in the sense of stable or lasting. The Hundred Thousand has the same three terms as here in the Tibetan (F.333.a), and only three in the Sanskrit (Ghoṣa 504): na sthitaṃ na viṣṭhitaṃ nādhiṣṭhitaṃ. The Tibetan byin gyis brlabs pa, “transformative power” (sometimes rendered “blessings”) is a standard translation of adhiṣṭhāna in one of its senses (See Edgerton p. 16), and we have here used the term “influence” in deference to the original translators, even though later interpretations seem to have favored a more basic sense.

- n.166 As in classical Greek, Sanskrit nouns and verbs are conjugated according to singular, dual, and plural forms.
- n.167 This alludes to the anecdote of a non-Buddhist mendicant named Śreṇika Vatsagotra (Pali: Vacchagotta); his name in Tibetan here is phreng ba can, and is found rendered as bzo sbyangs and sde can in Tibetan in other Prajñāpāramitā texts. Despite his narrow and limited scope, Śreṇika accepted the Buddha’s overall omniscience through faith, and because he did not perceive or appropriate anything at all. The anecdote is mentioned as significant in all the long Prajñāpāramitā sūtras in passages discussing the Buddha’s overall omniscience, e.g. (as well as here) in chapter 1 of the Aṣṭasāhasrikā (Toh 12); chapter 8, 8.35–8.38 of the Aṣṭadaśasāhasrikā (Toh 10); chapter 11, 11.31–11.33 of the Daśasāhasrikā (Toh 11); and in chapter 5 of the Śatasāhasrikā (Toh 8). The Prajñāpāramitā sūtras themselves give little further detail, and Śreṇika Vatsagotra’s questioning of the Buddha does not seem to appear in full in any canonical text in Tibetan translation. It is, however, related in a number of Pali texts and āgamas in Chinese; see particularly Majjhimanikāya, 71–73, and Saṃyuktāgama, SA 962–64 and SA2 196–98. Nāgārjuna’s Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra gives further details; see Lamotte 2010 vol. 1, p. 58, note 119. A useful summary is set out in Conze’s introduction to the long sūtra; see Conze 1975: pp. 12–13.
- n.168 This reading of gang nas derives from the Ten Thousand, F.118.a (11.33).
- n.169 In theory this meditative stability could be counted as first of the list that follows. However, in the passage introducing the second, parallel list in chapter 8 below, it is not mentioned; moreover, the two lists correspond more closely if this one is not taken as the first.

- n.170 The listing of the 119 meditative stabilities that follows corresponds to Dutt 1934: pp. 142–44. The similar list (with exegesis) given below, 8.247 corresponds to Dutt 1934: pp. 198–203 (see also Conze 1975: pp. 148–52). By contrast, in the Ten Thousand, 12.12, there appears to be a unique listing, which in many instances partakes of the list found here, but which sometimes adopts instead the readings found in the exegetical list (Dutt 1934: pp. 198–03). The following notes n.171–n.241 will be of interest only to specialists. At some point it would be worthwhile to produce a comprehensive table, juxtaposing the listings of these meditative stabilities, as found in all texts within the genre.
- n.171 This meditative stability is omitted in Dutt 1934: p. 142, line 10, but found in the other list on p. 198.
- n.172 This meditative stability is omitted in Dutt 1934: p. 142, line 10, but found in the other list in Dutt 1934: p. 198.
- n.173 The Sanskrit is attested in Dutt 1934: p. 142 and pp. 198–99. The Mahāvvyutpatti reads vilokitamūrdha, which has the same meaning; the seventh meditative stability in the Ten Thousand, unseen pinnacle (spyi gtsug bltar mi mthong ba), is clearly related but means the opposite.
- n.174 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 199, but replaced in the short list, p. 142, with samāhitāvasthāpratiṣṭha.
- n.175 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 199, but replaced in the short list, p. 142, with seal of the king (rājamudrā, rgyal po'i phyag rgya).
- n.176 This also occurs in the form balavīrya (Dutt 1934: p. 142). The other list, p. 199, reads balavyūha.
- n.177 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but is replaced in the other list, p. 199, with niruktinirdeśapraveśa.
- n.178 This meditative stability is attested in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 199, whereas the short list, p. 142, replaces adhivacanasampraveśa with anointment (āsecanakapraveśa).
- n.179 The Sanskrit digvilokita is attested in the other list (Dutt 1934: p. 199), whereas the short list, p. 142, reads digavalokana.
- n.180 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 199, with ādhāraṇamudrā. In the Ten Thousand, it is rendered as gzungs kyi phyag rgya.

- n.181 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as brjed pa med pa.
- n.182 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as nam mkha' khyab par byed pa.
- n.183 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 199, with tejovati.
- n.184 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 199, with apramāṇamābhāsa. In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as rgyal mtshan rtse mo'i tog.
- n.185 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 199, with asaṅgānāvāraṇa.
- n.186 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 199, with sarvadharmapraṁvṛttisamuccheda.
- n.187 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but omitted in the other list, p. 200.
- n.188 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, line 17. In the corresponding passage in the Ten Thousand, it is replaced with establishment of the array (bkod pa sgrub pa).
- n.189 In the Ten Thousand, this is replaced with rin chen 'byung gnas (precious source).
- n.190 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 200, but replaced in the short list, p. 142, with vipulapratipanna.
- n.191 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as snang ba mtha' yas pa.
- n.192 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as snang ba byed pa.
- n.193 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 142, but replaced in the other list, p. 200, with śuddhasāra.
- n.194 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 200, but replaced in the short list, p. 143, with aratikara.
- n.195 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 200, but omitted in the short list, p. 143.
- n.196 This meditative stability is omitted in Dutt 1934: p. 143—perhaps conflated with number 46: free from extinction (kṣayāpagata, zad pa dang bral ba).
- n.197 This is rendered in the Ten Thousand as nges par rgyal ba.

- n.198 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but replaced in the other list, p. 200, with akṣayāpagata.
- n.199 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as rnam par 'joms pa (overwhelming). In the other list, it is rendered as imperishable ('jig pa med pa).
- n.200 This meditative stability is omitted in the short list Dutt 1934: p. 143, and also omitted in the Ten Thousand.
- n.201 This accords with the short list (Dutt 1934: p. 143), whereas the other list, p. 200, suggests śuddhaprabhāsa. In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as snang ba dag pa.
- n.202 In the Ten Thousand, this is replaced with mchog gi 'byung gnas (supreme source).
- n.203 This meditative stability is omitted in the other list (Dutt 1934: p. 201). In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as ye shes tog.
- n.204 This meditative stability is omitted in Dutt 1934: p. 143, and presumably conflated with number 11 in the series.
- n.205 This accords with the short list (Dutt 1934: p. 143), whereas the other list, p. 201, suggests samantāloka.
- n.206 This accords with the other list (Dutt 1934: p. 201). It is omitted in the short list (p. 143).
- n.207 The short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, reads dharmāṅgata, but suggests dharmodgata in note 8. The other list, p. 201, reads sarvadharmodgata. In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as chos kyi gnas pa'i spyi gtsug.
- n.208 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as tshig thams cad rab tu 'byed pa.
- n.209 The other list (Dutt 1934: p. 201) reads only samākṣara.
- n.210 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 201, but replaced in the short list, p. 143, with anigara.
- n.211 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 201, where it is immediately followed by aprakāra. The latter is replaced in the short list, p. 143, with prabhākara.
- n.212 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 201, but omitted in the short list, p. 143.

- n.213 This accords with the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, whereas the other list, p. 201, suggests nāmanimittapraveśa.
- n.214 This accords with the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, whereas the other list, p. 201, suggests only timirāpagata.
- n.215 This is attested in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but omitted in the other list (p. 202).
- n.216 This accords with the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, whereas the other list (p. 202) reads cittasthitiniścitta.
- n.217 This accords with the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, whereas the other list (p. 202) reads anantaprabhāsa.
- n.218 This accords with the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, whereas the other list (p. 202) reads sarvadharmātikramaṇa.
- n.219 This meditative stability is found in the short list, though out of order (Dutt 1934: p. 143), and replaced in the other list (p. 202) with paricchedakara. In the Ten Thousand, the initial chos is omitted.
- n.220 This meditative stability is found in the short list, though out of order (Dutt 1934: p. 143), and omitted in the other list (p. 202). In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as shin tu brtags pa med pa.
- n.221 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 202, but omitted in the short list (p. 143).
- n.222 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 202, but omitted in the short list (p. 143). In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as bkod pa gcig pa.
- n.223 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, and rendered in the other list (p. 202) as ākārābhīnirhāra.
- n.224 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: 202, as ekākāravayūha, but omitted in the short list (p. 143).
- n.225 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but replaced in the other list (p. 202) with nirvedhikasarvabhāvatalādhikāra. In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered as srid pa 'dam bu thams cad phung po med par rnam par 'thor ba.
- n.226 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but replaced in the other list (p. 202) with nirghoṣo / kṣaravimukta. At this point the short list also inserts tejovati.

- n.227 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 202, but replaced in the short list (p. 143) with rakṣānupariśodhaṇa. In the Ten Thousand, the final syllable is rendered as dag pa rather than sbyong ba.
- n.228 This meditative stability is found in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 202, but replaced in the short list (p. 143) with anāvīlakṣānti.
- n.229 This meditative stability is attested in the short list Dutt 1934: p. 143, but replaced in the other list (p. 202) with sarvākaravaropeta. In the Ten Thousand this is rendered as rnam pa thams cad kyi mchog dang ldan pa.
- n.230 In the Ten Thousand, this is rendered simply as rnam pa zad mi shes pa.
- n.231 This meditative stability is found in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but replaced in the other list (p. 203) with dhāraṇīpratipatti.
- n.232 This meditative stability is omitted in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 143, but found in the other list (p. 203) as sarvārodhanirodhaprasāmana and followed immediately by anusārapratīsāra. In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as 'gal ba dang 'gog pa med pa.
- n.233 See Negi 1998: p. 2118, following MVT 608: anurodhapratirodha.
- n.234 This is rendered in the Ten Thousand as zla ba nya ba'i 'od dri ma med pa.
- n.235 This is rendered in the Ten Thousand as bkod pa chen po.
- n.236 This meditative stability is attested as such in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 144, and rendered in the other listing (p. 203) as sarvākāraprabhākara. In the Ten Thousand it is rendered as 'jig rten thams cad la 'od byed pa.
- n.237 This meditative stability is not attested in Sanskrit in either list. The short list (Dutt 1934: p. 144) instead reads anayavinayanayavimukta.
- n.238 This meditative stability is attested in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 144, but rendered in the other list (p. 203) as araṇasamavasaraṇa. The Ten Thousand here reads nyon mongs pa med pa nyon mongs pa dang bcas pa thams cad yang dag par 'du ba (convergence of all mental afflictions in nonaffliction).
- n.239 This meditative stability is not attested in either list, though rendered in the other list, Dutt 1934: p. 203, as anilāniketa, and in the short list (p. 144) as anilaniyata. The Ten Thousand reads g.yo ba med cing gnas pa med pa la dga' ba (engaged without departing and without remaining).

- n.240 The Ten Thousand omits ... s rab tu 'dul ba ("tamed by").
- n.241 This meditative stability is attested in the short list, Dutt 1934: p. 144, which also suggests that they comprise two distinct meditative stabilities. The other list (p. 203) omits the suffix gaganakalpa. In the Ten Thousand, the final syllables med pa are omitted.
- n.242 This reading follows Dutt 1934: p. 148, line 11: te abhiniviṣṭāḥ. Cf. Conze 1975: p. 108. Degé, however, reads de dag ni mngon par zhen pa ma yin te, suggesting that they are not fixated.
- n.243 Cf. Dutt: p. 155: na rūpaśūnyatayā rūpaṃ śūnyam...
- n.244 According to the Ten Thousand, 7.11, the subject of this paragraph is "inner forms" (nang gi gzugs) rather than the five aggregates.
- n.245 In the passage that starts here the Sanskrit terms padārtha and its negative or opposite apadārtha are crucial to an understanding of the text. Sanskrit pada, starting from its basic meaning of a footstep or track, also means a mark, standpoint, token, portion, sign, a matter, or a word; while artha (or ārtha) has an even wider range of meanings including aim, purpose, cause, motive, use, object, and meaning. The Tibetan translators of this text and of the Hundred Thousand have rendered the two compounds as tshig gi don and tshig gi don med pa, of which the literal translations in English might be "the meaning of the word" and "the absence of meaning of the word." However, don here must be understood as referring not to "meaning" in the sense of a definition of some kind, but rather to the actual thing denoted by the word. Here we have followed that interpretation, which is not unreasonable given the clear association with the "word" in question, bodhisattva. Note that the Tibetan of the Eighteen Thousand (11.2 et seq.) renders the two compounds gzhi'i don and gzhi med pa'i don, i.e., using a different interpretation of pada and a different analysis of the second compound.
- n.246 sems can as the Tibetan rendering of the sattva in Skt. bodhisattva rather than from the Tibetan sems dpa'. The Sanskrit of this whole passage in the "recast" Pañcaviṃśatisāhasrikā (Dutt 160–161) is substantially different but can be followed in the equivalent passage of the Śatasāhasrikā (Ghoṣa 1.7).
- n.247 Dutt 1934: p. 160 reads padam na vidyate. The present translation of gnas med as "without any basis," rather than "without abiding," accords with the Ten Thousand, F.54.b (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh11.html#UT22084-031-002-4855>), line 5 and so on, where the Tibetan gzhi med occurs throughout.

- n.248 The lists of phenomena in the following breakdown of phenomena into their different categories, though not their order or their more detailed categorization are paralleled in the first two chapters of the Ten Thousand (Toh 11) 1.11 et seq. In the following footnotes references are provided to Konow's (1941) translation and reconstruction of the Sanskrit of these chapters of the Ten Thousand as well as to Conze's synoptic translation of the "Large Sūtra."

- n.259 sems can gyi phung po chen po nges pa renders the Sanskrit (mahāsattvarāśiniyata, in Ghoṣa) but misses some of the wordplay. This is almost certainly a reference to the category of "those whose [receptivity] to the correct is certain" (samyaktvaniyatam, yang dag pa nyid du nges pa, or in this text just nges pa'i phung po) of the three categories or groupings of beings (trīn sattvarāśin, sems can gyi phung po gsum) mentioned later in the text (in 42.24 and 53.140 et seq.), and also in the Lalitavistara (see the Play in Full 25.47), the Mahāvastu, and Mahāvīyutpatti 7137. This passage reads somewhat differently in the Tibetan of the Tengyur version and of the Eighteen Thousand, as well as in the equivalent Sanskrit (which doubles the phrase to mahāsattvarāśir mahāsattvanikāya). See also n.513 and n.560.

- n.260 This point in the text corresponds to the beginning of Chapter 12 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-1149>) in the Eighteen Thousand.
- n.261 This point in the text corresponds to the beginning of Chapter 13 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-1177>) in the Eighteen Thousand.
- n.262 Dutt 1934: p. 176 replaces this term with vyupaparīkṣaṇā (“scrutiny”). See also Conze 1975: p. 129.
- n.263 This reading corresponds to Skt. asamucchita (gtsugs med pa). The alternative asneha (gcugs med pa) could be rendered as “without ties.”
- n.264 The repetition of bsam gtan gi yan lag here in Degé, line 2 may possibly be a misprint for tshad med dang gzugs med kyi snyoms ’jug.
- n.265 The Sanskrit term bhāvanāvibhāvanā, as attested in Kimura and Ghoṣa, is rendered as bsgom pa rnam par ’jig pa, literally “the destruction of cultivation,” in the Tibetan translations of the Ten Thousand (Toh 11), Eighteen Thousand (Toh 10), and the Tengyur version of the Twenty-Five Thousand (Toh 3790). In this version of the Twenty-Five Thousand and in the Hundred Thousand (Toh 8), however, it is rendered bsgom pa rnam par bsgom pa, suggesting more an analysis or investigation of cultivation rather than its destruction or negation. The Mahāvīyutpatti (6360) includes both renderings of the vibhāvanā part of the compound, which we have chosen to translate, here and in chapter 37 (37.19) as well as in chapter 53 (53.96) where the compound is found in reverse order, as “breaking down,” in order to retain the widest range of possible meanings: “examination,” “analysis,” “exposure,” “deconstruction,” “destruction,” “annihilation,” “elimination,” or “unraveling” with respect to false appearances. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 109; also Conze 1975: p. 135 n12. Ratnākarakṣānti also reads avibhāvitam aprahīṇam. no hīti nāprahīṇam | prahīṇam evety arthaḥ |. Thanks to Greg Seton for this observation. See also n.452.

- n.266 This point in the text corresponds to the beginning of Chapter 14 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-1267>) in the Eighteen Thousand.
- n.267 Note the emphatic repetition of the phrase “they should don the great armor” (go cha chen po bgos so).
- n.268 These six ways in which the trichiliocosm is said to shake are as follows: when the eastern side rises up the western side sinks low, when the western side rises up the eastern side sinks low, when the southern side rises up the northern side sinks low, when the northern side rises up the southern side sinks low, when the edges rise up the center sinks low, and when the center rises up the extremes sink low.
- n.269 Dutt p. 187, line 5 reads “medications” (bhaiṣajya) for which the Tibetan has: rtsi dang yo byad.
- n.270 Tib. sgyu ma'i chos nyid nye bar bzung na chos rnams kyi chos nyid de yin pa. Dutt 1934: p. 187, lines 18–19 reads: dharmataiṣā subhūte dharmāṇām māyā-dharmatāmupadaya. Conze 1975: p. 138 translates: “For such is the true nature of dharmas that in fact they are illusory.”
- n.271 Our text reads chos nyid (“reality”), whereas Dutt 1934, p. 189, line 13 reads samatā (“sameness”) and Conze 1975: p. 139, follows accordingly.
- n.272 This reading (“connected with”) follows Dutt 1934, p. 190, line 9: pratisaṃyuktam, and Conze 1975: p. 140. The Tibetan kyis is ambiguous and could also imply “by means of.”
- n.273 Here the Tibetan reads kyi rather than kyis.
- n.274 The three verbs here and repeated in the passage that follows are, in the Degé, ma byas, nam par ma byas, and mngon par ma byas, or mi byed, nam par mi byed, and mngon par mi byed. Dutt’s and Ghoṣa’s Sanskrit have na ... karoti na vikaroti nābhisaṃskaroti. The Ten Thousand and Eighteen Thousand have, instead, ma byas, ma bshig (“not destroyed” or “unmade”), and mngon par 'dus ma byas.
- n.275 This point in the text corresponds to the beginning of Chapter 15 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-1339>) in the Eighteen Thousand.
- n.276 While the first question is answered in great detail in what follows of this chapter and of chapter 9, the second question is answered at the beginning of chapter 10 at 10.1 and the third and fourth questions from 10.28 onward.

- n.277 For variant listings, see Konow 1941: pp. 30–31, and the reconstructed Sanskrit on pp. 102–4. See also the translation in Sparham 2006: I, pp. 107–10, which lists twenty aspects of emptiness.
- n.278 This phrase is missing in the Tibetan (Degé, F.201.b, line 7).
- n.279 Since the term “entities” (bhāva, dngos po) specifically denotes the conditioned phenomena of the aggregates, this would seem to preclude Lamotte’s translation (op. cit. p. 1762) of dngos po as “existence,” although “existents” could be an acceptable alternative. Similarly, the term “nonentities” (abhāva, dngos po med pa) denotes unconditioned phenomena and is therefore incompatible with Lamotte’s “nonexistence.”
- n.280 This list is closely similar to the list in 6.20; the differences are noted below.
- n.281 In the previous list of the 119 meditative stabilities, 6.20, this is named without fear (viṛta, ’jigs pa med pa). In the Ten Thousand, 12.12 (F.126.a, line 3), it is rendered as rnam par ’joms pa.
- n.282 Tib. nyon mongs pa dang bcas pa thams cad nyon mongs pa med par yang dag par gzhol ba. Omitted in the previous list of 119 meditative stabilities.
- n.283 This reading accords with Dutt 1934 p. 201, second to last line, and Conze 1975: p. 151 (no. 70). According to our text (Degé F.230.a, line 2) the verb is negative (yang dag par yongs su mi mthong ba).
- n.284 The list of eleven aspects of knowledge that follows differs slightly in content, and significantly in order, from the list in the Ten Thousand.
- n.285 The recollection of disillusionment with cyclic existence (udvegānusmṛti, skyo ba rjes su dran pa), as found at 2.5 (and in Nordrang Orgyan 2008: p. 2157), is the preferred reading here. The text in the Degé and other Kangyurs reads skye ba rjes su dran pa (“recollection of birth”) but the Yongle (see KPD 26: p. 541, note 9) and the Stok Palace (ka F.329.a) have skyo ba, etc. See also n.112.
- n.286 In most lists of the ten powers, the polysemous term dhātu (*kham*s) is interpreted to mean the constituents or constitution of individual beings rather than the realms of cyclic existence. Here, however, the Tibetan *’jig rten gyi kham*s ni sna tshogs can te/’*jig rten gyi kham*s ni du ma pa’o and the Sanskrit (from the Hundred Thousand) nānādhātuloke ’nekadhātur loka suggest the latter interpretation is emphasized. The word loka is not present in the Sanskrit of the Tengyur version of the Twenty-Five Thousand.

- n.287 The listing of the ten powers of the tathāgatas is analyzed in Konow 1941, pp. 37–39, with reconstructed Sanskrit on pp. 105–6, even though the list in the Ten Thousand is not identical in all respects. A full explanation of these powers can be found in the passage at 2.257–2.387 in The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata (Tathāgatamahākaruṇānirdeśa, Toh 147, also known as The Sūtra of Dhāraṇīśvararāja, Dhāraṇīśvararājasūtra), in which the ten powers are described as the first ten of thirty-two actions of a tathāgata. Cf. also Dayal 1932: p. 20, and Sparham 2012 (IV): p. 80. Note, however, that the lists vary somewhat in detail.
- n.288 tshangs pa'i 'khor lo... ra btu bskor bar bya'o (brāhmaṇi cakram pravartayāmi in the Sanskrit). The wheel is Brahmā's emblem and the term “wheel of Brahmā” may therefore simply refer to the wheel of the Buddha's teachings. Alternatively, the Bṛhaṭṭīkā (Toh 3808, 4.1003) glosses this as “turning the wheel like Brahmā” (tshangs pa bzhin du 'khor lo bskor), while the same phrase in the Ratnagotravibhāga is expanded by Dolpopa to “turning the wheel of Dharma in the realm of Brahmā” (tshangs pa'i gnas su chos kyi 'khor lo skor ba).
- n.289 See the glossary entry “four fearlessnesses” for notes and comparative references to this set.
- n.290 Lexical explanations (nirukta, nges pa'i tshig) here implies the exact knowledge of the primary and derivative definitions and explanations of names and words. Inspired eloquence (pratibhāna, spobs pa) is the means by which the teachings are expressed. On the philological origins of these four kinds of exact knowledge—the essentials through which the buddhas impart their teachings—see Konow 1941: p. 40, and the reconstructed Sanskrit on p. 107; also Dayal 1932: pp. 259–67, and Sparham 2012 (IV): pp. 78–79.
- n.291 See the analysis of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas in Konow 1941: pp. 41–44, which discusses the etymology of āveṇika and compares alternative listings; also Dayal 1932: pp. 21–23, and Sparham 2012 (IV): p. 82.
- n.292 Degé, F.245.b, line 1, reads ṭa, but the Yongle, Peking, Narthang, Urga, and Lhasa all read ḍa (see KPD 26: p. 552, note 3), which is clearly the correct reading here.
- n.293 Sanskrit stambha may also suggest “rigidity.”
- n.294 Dutt 1934, p. 212 reads gagana, but see Conze 1975, p. 161.
- n.295 This follows the Tibetan (vol. 26, p. 553) but for alternative readings see Conze 1975, p. 161. Dutt 1934, p. 212, last line reads taccānulabdhitā, suggesting perhaps that “that-ness” is not apprehended.

- n.296 This is missing in Dutt 1934, whereas Conze 1975, p. 161 suggests mārtya (“mortality”) or artha (“meaning”).
- n.297 Dutt 1934, p. 213 suggests “aging” (jarā). The Skt. jarā is said to be rendered in the Saka language as ysara. See Conze 1975, p. 161.
- n.298 Conze 1975, p. 162 suggests unsteadiness (g.yo ba) although the requisite ḍh syllable is absent.
- n.299 In the Sanskrit (Dutt 1934, p. 214), this mention of beneficial states is an item of its own in the list of ten refinements (see following note), but in this and the other Kangyur versions of the long sūtra, including the Hundred Thousand (ga F.196.b), as well as in the Tengyur version (Toh 3790) it appears to be deliberately associated with equanimity as evidenced by the use of a participle (zhing) between the two in place of the conjunction (dang) used between the other items.
- n.300 This one of the ten refinements, present in this text, in its Tengyur version (Toh 3790), and in the Hundred Thousand, is omitted in the Sanskrit (Dutt 1934, p. 214), which instead presents the second refinement in this list as two distinct items. See also preceding note n.299.
- n.301 The Tibetan reads mig for yig.
- n.302 Missing in Dutt 1934, p. 215, which adds “mendicants” (pravrajita).
- n.303 Missing in Dutt 1934, p. 215.
- n.304 This is omitted both in Degé, F.250.a, line 4, and KPD 26: p. 562, but included in Dutt 1934, p. 218. See the previous note.
- n.305 Omitted in Dutt 1934, p. 218.
- n.306 Degé F.252.a, line 7, reads yongs su spyod pa (“enjoy”), but see KPD 26: p. 567, note 7 for the preferred reading yong su sbyong ba (“purify”).
- n.307 Missing in Dutt 1934, p. 220.
- n.308 The avoidance of doubt (vicikitsā, the tshom) is omitted in Degé F.254.a, line 1, also in KPD 26: p. 572. On this, see the note in Conze 1973, p. 172.
- n.309 Degé F.254b, line 7, reads kha za yag. Dutt 221, line 18, reads parityajya na durmanasko bhavati, suggesting that bodhisattvas should practice generosity, etc., without ill thoughts of regret, futility, or despondency. The Śatasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitābṛhatṭīkā (‘bum pa rgya cher ‘grel pa, Toh 3807) glosses this rare term as follows: kha za yag gi sems su mi bya zhes bya ba ni stong pa’am don med par mi bya'o zhes bya ba'i don to, suggesting that it denotes futility. Tulku Pema Wangyal (oral communication, 25 January 2018) interprets this to mean that the acts of a bodhisattva, such as generosity, should not be undertaken with regret or second thoughts. According to KPD 26: p. 573, note 4, the Choné xylograph edition suggests the alternative reading: kha gsag (lapana, "flattery").

- n.310 Missing in Degé F.257.b, line 6; also in KPD 26: p. 579.
- n.311 This point in the text is the equivalent of the end of chapter 17 in the Eighteen Thousand, "Level Purification," and the next passage is comprised in chapter 18 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html?part=UT22084-029-001-chapter-16#UT22084-029-001-chapter-18>), "The Exposition of Going Forth in the Great Vehicle."
- n.312 Tib. gnas pa med pa, following KPD 26: p. 600, note 2. Degé F.266.b, line 5, reads gnas pa, which may correspond to Dutt 1934, p. 228, line 17, yāna.
- n.313 Cf. Dutt 1934: p. 228, line 17; also Conze 1975: p. 180. The latter follows Dutt in reading the conclusion with a negative particle: "will not attain deliverance; will not come to a halt." Dutt also acknowledges that there are other Sanskrit manuscripts without the negative particle, which would therefore interpret the final line positively, as does the corresponding Tibetan text of the Ten Thousand, 12.42.
- n.314 This distinctive enumeration of the ten levels (daśabhūmi, sa bcu) is particularly associated with the tradition of the Prajñāpāramitā literature and, as such, it is at variance with other listings of the ten levels found in the sūtras, as well as the list of seven levels found in Asaṅga's Bodhisattvabhūmi. Note, however, that the other, more widespread set of ten is mentioned as well at this point in the Tengyur version (Toh 3790, ga, F.256.a–b) and in Dutt's Sanskrit (Dutt: 1934: pp. 230–31; also Conze 1975: p. 181) as well as in the Eighteen Thousand (18.38). Of this distinctive set of ten, the first seven are said to be attainable by śrāvakas (śrāvaka, nyan thos), and they are enumerated separately in the Mahāvvyutpatti (1141–47). Among them, the level of the spiritual family is associated with śrāvakas in general. The eighth-lowest level is associated with candidates for entering the stream to nirvāṇa and is so called because it is the first and lowest of eight categories of noble person, though it is sometimes also said to denote the "eightfold receptiveness to the path of insight" (darśanamārgāṣṭakṣānti, mthong lam gyi bzod pa brgyad), which comprises "knowledge of phenomena" (dharmajñāna, chos shes pa) and "subsequent knowledge" (anvayajñāna, rjes su rtogs pa'i shes pa) with respect to each of the four truths of the noble ones. The level of insight is associated with those who have entered the stream to nirvāṇa, the level of attenuated refinement is associated with those who are destined for only one more rebirth, the level of no attachment is associated with those who are not subject to future rebirths, and the level of spiritual achievement is associated with arhats. Cf. Sparham 2006 (I): pp. 296–97, and Conze 1975: pp. 163–78. See also Nordrang Orgyan 2003: p. 2508, and for an analysis of the alternative lists, Dayal 1932: pp. 270–91.

- n.315 The passage that follows exemplifies a recurring point of importance and contention in the Tibetan translations of the Prajñāpāramitā literature, namely that the expression ma mchis may correspond either to the Sanskrit nāsti (“to be nonexistent”), to navidyate (“to be unknown”), or to na dṛśyate (“to not be discerned”). The same is true of the equivalent non-negative forms true when the verb is not in the negative. In the present context, Dutt 1934 p. 231, line 17 and so on, reads na dṛśyate, and we have therefore opted to translate the term as “not discern.” Incidentally, the Ten Thousand, 13.13, concurs, adopting the equivalent Tibetan expression mi mngon lags.
- n.316 These are all enumerated above, 10.76.
- n.317 See above, n.314.
- n.318 Two distinct enumerations of the sixty aspects of buddha speech (gsung dbyangs rnam pa drug bcu) are found in Nordrang Orgyan 2003: pp. 3572–74. See also Jamspal et al, 2004: pp. 156–58; and Sparham 2006 (I): 132–33.
- n.319 This paragraph appears to be missing in Dutt 1934: p. 235, but it is included in Conze 1975: p. 184.
- n.320 Cf. Dutt 1934: pp. 235–36; also Conze 1975: p. 184.
- n.321 As indicated in KPD 26: p. 663, note 3, the Yongle, Litang, and Choné woodblock editions all at this point include the incantation ye dharmā hetuprabhavā hetun teṣāṃ tathāgato bhavat āha teṣāṃ ca yo nirodho evaṃ vādī mahāśramaṇaḥ (“Whatever events arise from causes, the Tathāgata has told of their causes, and the great ascetic has also taught their cessation”); and they also end with the benediction maṅgalaṃ bhavantu.
- n.322 Degé ka, F.296.a, line 2, and KPD 26: p. 669 both omit the level of bright insight.
- n.323 See Conze 1975: p. 186. Dutt 1934: p. 240 reads na nāma ... nānāma—probably a misprint for na māna nānmāna.

- n.324 Degé ka, F.309.b, line 6 (also KPD 26: p. 701) misreads mi mnyam pa'i chos nyid. See Dutt 1934, p. 243, line 17.
- n.325 Note that in this paragraph the six perfections are included twice—once in descending order and once in ascending order.
- n.326 See above, n.315. Here the Tibetan ma mchis renders na vidyate (Dutt 1934, p. 244, line 21).
- n.327 The word byang chub sems dpa' is missing in Degé ka, F.312.a, line 4, but see KPD 26: p. 707, note 1.
- n.328 The question does not seem to match exactly any of the questions put by Śāriputra at the start of this passage.
- n.329 chos thams cad byed pa med par yang dag par rjes su mthong la. The Eighteen Thousand has mi g.yo bar here instead of byed pa med par. In both cases it is not clear if this negative phrase is a negative property they observe in phenomena (as in the following phrases) or an adverb describing how they observe phenomena.
- n.330 Subhūti explains this topic further in the next chapter, at 13.43.
- n.331 Cf. Dutt 1934: pp. 256–57; also Conze 1975: p. 194. On the term āratā āramitā see also Sparham 2006 (I): p. 144.
- n.332 Cf. Sparham 2006 (I): p. 145.
- n.333 This question and Subhūti's answers refer back to the passage at the end of chapter 12, 12.203. Note that the Ten Thousand here reads 'grib pa med pa ("imperishable") instead of gnyis su med pa ("nondual"), in this and the following paragraphs, but see Dutt 1934: p. 259, which reads advaya ("nondual").
- n.334 Dutt 1934: p. 259; also Conze 1975: p. 195. The term "five degrees of enlightenment" (byang chub chen po rnam pa lnga) is interpreted by Vimuktisena (Sparham 2006 (I): p. 145) to denote the results such as entering the stream, which are mentioned in the following paragraph. See also the Extensive Explanation (Toh 3808, 4.1313).
- n.335 The three fetters (trisaṃyojana, kun tu sbyor gsum) comprise the fetter of inertia due to false views about perishable composites (satkāyadṛṣṭi, 'jig tshogs la lta ba), the fetter of attachment to moral and ascetic supremacy (śīlavrata-parāmarśa, tshul khrims dang brtul zhugs mchog tu 'dzin pa), and the fetter of doubt (vicikitsā, the tshom). See Nyima & Dorje 2001: p. 33; also Nordrang Orgyan 2003: p. 169. See also above, 2.225.

- n.336 Degé F.367.a, line 2 reads dga' ba (“joy”) for dka' ba (“hardship”), but see KPD 26: p. 828, note 1 for the correct reading.
- n.337 Degé F.368.b, line 3 reads 'on tam skye ba mi skye (“or does arising not arise”), which is inconsistent with the response that follows. We have followed the reading in the Yongle and Peking Kangyurs, 'on tam mi skye ba (see KPD 26: p. 831, note 3).
- n.338 This reading follows the Tibetan: khyod chos ma skyes so/ chos ma skyes so/ zhes bya bar brjod par spobs sam. However, Dutt 1934: p. 261, line 14 suggests that the verb is in the third person (pratibhāti), for which reason the passage could be read as, “Is it intelligible to say that phenomena are nonarising?” Cf. Conze 1975: pp. 196–97. The Tibetan could also be read more colloquially: “Do you dare to say that phenomena are nonarising!”
- n.339 According to the Ten Thousand, he is inspired to do so, and the following sentence too is affirmative. However, the Hundred Thousand (vol. 17, F.247.a) confirms the negative for both statements.
- n.340 See preceding note n.339.
- n.341 By contrast, the Ten Thousand here reads “without apprehending anything’ (mi dmigs pa'i tshul gyis), as does Conze 1975, p. 198.
- n.342 In this and the following paragraphs there are significant differences between our text and the “recast” Sanskrit version edited in Dutt 1934, pp. 266–67. Cf. Conze 1975, pp. 199–200.
- n.343 In Degé F.378.b, line 5, the phrase med pa'i phyir is missing. See KPD 26: p. 852, note 1.
- n.344 The end of this thirteenth chapter (here and also in the Hundred Thousand) marks the end of the “intermediate teaching” (see Introduction, i.60). Most of the rest of the text from here onward constitutes the “detailed teaching.” In the Eighteen Thousand, the same transition from intermediate to detailed teachings is found at the end of chapter 21. In all three long sūtras, this point also marks the end of the section on the first of the eight topics of The Ornament of Clear Realization, i.e., all-aspect omniscience (sarvākārajñatā, rnam pa thams cad mkhyen pa nyid), and the beginning of the second, knowledge of the path (mārgajñatā, lam gyi rnam pa shes pa nyid). In the Tengyur “Eight-chapter” version of this text (Toh 3790)—the chapters conforming to the eight topics—this point corresponds to the end of the first chapter and is found, in the Degé Tengyur, in volume 83, folio 8a.

- n.345 The title “Subhūti” in this chapter colophon may be intended to refer not only to this chapter 13 but also to the entirety of the “intermediate teaching,” i.e., chapters 2 through 13, which is referred to as “the Subhūti chapter” (subhūtiparivarta, rab 'byor gyi le'u) in chapter 16 at 16.38. See introduction i.60 and n.360 below.
- n.346 On the hierarchy of the six god realms within the realm of desire (kāmadhātu), which are all mentioned here, commencing with Trayastriṃśa and Caturmahārājakāyika, and concluding with Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmānarata, and Paranirmitavaśavartin, see the chart in Dudjom Rinpoche 1991: pp. 14–15.
- n.347 The sixteen Brahmā realms, extending from Brahmakāyika to Bṛhatphala, correspond to lesser, middling, and higher degrees of the four meditative concentrations. See glossary under Pure Abodes.
- n.348 On the hierarchy of the five pure abodes (śuddhanivāsa) at the pinnacle of the realm of form (rūpadhātu), extending from Avṛha to Akaniṣṭha, see the chart in Dudjom Rinpoche 1991: pp. 14–15.
- n.349 This refers to the realization of the arhats and those no longer subject to further rebirths within cyclic existence who are incapable of generating the mind of enlightenment that resolves to remain in the world for the sake of beings. Note that our text reads yang dag par for yang dag pa'i. In the passages that follow, the theme of “knowledge of the path” considers how bodhisattvas will view the paths of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.
- n.350 Our text reads gyi, but see KDP vol. 27, p. 4, note 1 for the preferred reading gyis.
- n.351 That is to say, although arhats and the like are unable to remain in the world in order to eliminate the sufferings of beings, they may for the remainder of their last life focus on the intent of the Mahāyāna. Cf Kimura II-III: p. 2; also Conze 1975: pp. 203–4, and Sparham 2008 II: pp. 73–77.
- n.352 This list, repeated in all the fifteen paragraphs that follow, is described in some commentaries including the Long Explanation (Toh 3808, 5.12) as the “fifteen modes of attention” although the number of items is not clearly limited to fifteen. In other interpretations sixteen items are identified grouped as different aspects of the four truths of the noble ones (see Conze 1975 p. 204). For further interpretations of these terms, see the commentaries in Sparham 2008 II: pp. 5–6 and 83–84. The list is slightly different in the Ten Thousand and Eighteen Thousand in both of which, among other terminological differences, “at peace” (zhi ba) is missing. Note that “without a self” (bdag gi med pa) is duplicated after “vacuous” (śūnyataḥ, stong pa nyid).

- n.353 Kimura II-III: p. 4, line 8: evaṃ dharmeṇa, chos kho nar zad de.
- n.354 Cf. Kimura II-III: p. 4, lines 23–25; also Conze 1975: p. 205, and the commentary in Sparham 2008 II: p. 7.
- n.355 This reading follows the Sanskrit asaṃskṛta-prabhāvitam (Kimura II-III: 8 line 14), on which see Conze 1975: p. 207. The Tibetan here reads 'dus ma byas las gdags—“designated on the basis of unconditioned phenomena.”
- n.356 See the commentary in Sparham 2008 II: pp. 9–10.
- n.357 Kimura II-III: p. 13, line 26 na rūpaṃ prajñaptaṃ. Tib. gzugs su btags pa med do.
- n.358 This address to the gods rather than to the group of elders including Śāradvatīputra, Mahāmaudgalyāyana, Mahākauṣṭhila, Mahākātyāyana, Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra, and Mahākāśyapa, who asked the original question (see above, 15.9), appears to be misplaced, but it does conform to the Sanskrit (Kimura II: p. 15: line 29) where the devas are included among those posing the question. See also Conze 1975: p. 211.
- n.359 Kimura II-III: p. 18, line 27, which adds “concentrated intellectual brilliance” (samāhitapratibhāna); also Conze 1975: p. 212.
- n.360 “The discourse of Subhūti” (subhūteḥ parivarta, rab 'byor kyi le'u) could be taken as a general statement, but may more probably refer to “the Subhūti chapter,” i.e., the first thirteen chapters of this text, identified in commentaries as the “intermediate explanation,” and focused according to The Ornament of Clear Realization on the first of the eight topics, all-aspect omniscience. In the Tengyur “eight-chapter” version of this text (Toh 3790), this passage in the text opens the point at which, having considered the paths of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, the “knowledge of the path” begins to focus on the path of bodhisattvas; however, in that version the sutra conforms more closely to the eight topics than in this one, in which the order is substantially different.
- n.361 Kimura II: p. 33 line 2 reads: dharmadhātovārambhaṇānantatayā. Note that the Tibetan reads chos kyi dbyings mtha' yas pa'i phyir instead of chos kyi dbyings dmigs pa mtha' yas pa'i phyir.
- n.362 Kimura II: p. 33, line 4 reads tathatārambhaṇānantatayā. The Tibetan de bzhin nyid dmigs pa med pas mtha' yas pa'i phyir inserts med pas, which would appear to conflict with the sense of the passage.

- n.363 The reading with the interrogative dam (KPD vol. 27, p. 118, note 4) corresponds to Kimura II-III: p. 33, line 23.
- n.364 This point corresponds to the end of chapter 24 and the beginning of chapter 25 in the Eighteen Thousand.
- n.365 Kimura, II-III: p. 35 reads Dīpavatī, as does Conze 1975: p. 220.
- n.366 Kimura, II-III: p. 35, line 15 reads vidyācaraṇasampanna; Tib. mkhyen pa dang rkang par ldan pa.
- n.367 The first six of these, extending from Caturmahārājakāyika to Paranirmita-vaśavartin, designate the hierarchy of the gods within the realm of desire, whereas the twelve realms subsumed in their threefold strata under the names Mahābrahmā, Ābhāsvara, Śubhakṛtsna, and Bṛhatphala designate the hierarchy of the gods within the realm of form, attainable through the four meditative concentrations. See the chart in Dudjom Rinpoche 1991: pp. 14–15.
- n.368 For the last mentioned, Kimura II-III: p. 37 reads utpathagata, which Conze 1975: p. 222 interprets as “staying on a highway.”
- n.369 See n.124.
- n.370 This reading follows Kimura II-III: p. 38, prajñāyante, for which Conze 1975, p. 222, suggests “are conceived.” The Tibetan translation yod pa (“be present”) seems to be contextually more opaque.
- n.371 Missing in the Tibetan, but see Kimura II: p. 41, line 15: atha khalu...
- n.372 According to traditional Indian cosmology, our human world of Patient Endurance (sahālokadhātu, mi mjed 'jig rten gyi khams) is said to comprise four continents, namely, Pūrvavideha in the east, Jambudvīpa in the south, Aparagodānīya in the west, and Uttarakuru in the north. A single world system (cakravāla) extends from the realms of the hells, pretas, and animals through those human abodes, and through the celestial domains of the six god realms belonging to the realm of desire, the twenty-one god realms of the realm of form (twenty-one in this text, seventeen in others), and the four activity fields of the realm of formlessness. In association with the four meditative concentrations, this single world system multiplies incrementally: the chiliocosm (sāhasralokadhātu, stong gi 'jig rten gyi khams) comprises one thousand such parallel worlds, the medium dichiliocosm (dvisāhasra-madhyamalokadhātu, stong gnyis pa 'jig rten gyi khams 'bring po) one thousand of these, and the great trichiliocosm (trisāhasramahāsāhasralokadhātu, stong sum gyi *stong chen po'i 'jig rten gyi kham*s) one thousand of these yet again. For an analysis of the divergent traditions associated with this cosmology, see Kloetzli (1983): pp. 23–90.

- n.373 The translation here follows the Sanskrit (see n.315). The Tibetan: 'byung ba yod do at the end of the first sentence could also be read as “continue to emerge.”
- n.374 This follows the reading of slar zhi zhing, found in the Narthang and Lhasa editions (KPD vol. 27, p. 189, note 8). According to Choné (same ref.) the text should read bzlog shing (“they will be averted”). Our text at this point suggests slos shing.
- n.375 Kimura II: p. 70, line 17 reads mahāvidyeya, which Conze 1975: p. 237 renders as “great lore.” The Tibetan rig sngags may convey the sense of either “gnostic mantra” (vidyāmantra) or simply vidyā—“knowledge,” “lore.”
- n.376 See above n.315. The Tibetan here reads: yod pa yin, throughout this and the following paragraphs.
- n.377 Tib. gdags su yod.
- n.378 Elsewhere (Kimura II-III: p. 79 and Conze 1975: pp. 243–44), this passage is attributed to Śakra.
- n.379 See n.315. Here the Tibetan reads mchis so.
- n.380 Again, the Sanskrit expression is prajñāyante (Tib. 'chis lags). See n.315.
- n.381 The Tibetan here reads dben (“isolated”), which could convey the sense of being singled out.
- n.382 Cf. Kimura II-III: pp. 83–84; also Conze 1975: p. 246. As indicated above, n.367, these seventeen god realms comprise six associated with the realm of desire; twelve, in four groups of three, associated with the realm of form; and the five pure abodes at the summit of phenomenal existence. See the chart in Dudjom Rinpoche 1991: pp. 14–15.
- n.383 Viśrāntin (viśrāntin, ngal bso po) is an epithet of Vaiśravaṇa. See Negi 1995, vol. 3, p. 945.
- n.384 This passage in which the Buddha emphasizes the respect due to the Dharma has been studied in Skilling et al (2013), pp. 159–82. The authors demonstrate how, along with a number of parallel passages extant in other Sanskrit, Chinese, and Tibetan sources, it can be traced to the Pali Uruvela Sutta (AN 4.21).

- n.385 See n.315. In this case the Tibetan reads yod do for prajñayante.
- n.386 See preceding note n.385.
- n.387 The point here is that the merit accrued from teaching exclusively those bodhisattvas who are irreversible will be of greater extent.
- n.388 See Conze 1975: p. 267.
- n.389 The chapter title “Śakra” in this chapter colophon may be intended to encompass not only this chapter but also the entire group of chapters that constitute the first section of the “detailed teaching” (see Introduction i.61), i.e., chapters 14 through 23, in which Śakra (addressed by the Buddha as Kauśika) is among the principal interlocutors. Śakra continues to figure in some of the chapters that follow but in a less prominent role. Note that the content of the short Prajñāpāramitā sūtra The Perfection of Wisdom for Kauśika (Toh 19 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh19.html>)) does not (in any identifiable way) correspond to the particularities of this section, of which it might be expected to be a summary.
- n.390 Skt. saṃvidyante, Tib. yod pa. See n.315.
- n.391 Kimura II-III: p. 142 simply reads drṣṭi.
- n.392 The three times are when the Buddha (1) proclaims what the four truths are; (2) teaches that they must be comprehended, eliminated, realized, and cultivated; and (3) states that he himself has comprehended, eliminated, realized, and cultivated them. The twelve ways are when these three phases are applied to each of the four truths in turn. The twelve are set out in detail in the several canonical passages that recount the Buddha’s first teaching on the four truths; see, for example, The Sūtra of the Wheel of Dharma (Toh 337), 1.-3-1.14 and n.21.
- n.393 Here we have omitted the repetition of bsam gtan bzhi, tshad med bzhi, and gzugs med pa’i snyoms par ’jug pa bzhi.
- n.394 Kimura II: p. 147, lines 23–28. This passage and the paragraphs that immediately follow (KPD vol. 27, pp. 382–83) appear to suggest that the very act of perception is incompatible with the practice of the perfection of wisdom, even if the perception is accurate. The Ten Thousand inverts the interpretation here.

- n.395 Tib. don dang tshul las. Skt. arthataś ca nayataś ca (Kimura II-III: p. 149).
- n.396 Kimura II: p. 149, line 16 correctly reads anupalambhayogena. The Tibetan (KPD vol. 27, line 18), misreads dmigs pa'i tshul gyis.
- n.397 The Tibetan reads “roast” (bsreg bar 'gyur ro), whereas the Kimura II-III: p. 151 reads prakṣepsyante (“they will be cast into”).
- n.398 KPD vol. 27, p. 398. The Ten Thousand here suggests that they will have gone forth.
- n.399 This line is omitted in our text, but see Kimura II: p. 158, lines 32–33: asaṃskṛtaviśuddhyā saṃskṛtaviśuddhir iti; also Conze 1975: p. 294.
- n.400 Kimura II: p. 164; also Conze 1975: p. 298. This concludes the second abhisamaya.
- n.401 Kimura II-III: p. 175 reads ca prajñāyate, and KPD, vol. 27, p. 468 reads yang yod, suggesting that in the mistaken thoughts of the monk, these fruitional aggregates and goals are “still discerned” or “still existent.” Conze, 1975: p. 304, on the other hand, reads the expression negatively as “not conceived,” continuing on from na nirudhyate.
- n.402 Our text (vol. 27, p. 484) misreads 'gro ba med pa for gos pa med pa. The Ten Thousand correctly reads gos pa med pa; Kimura II-III: p. 179, last line, reads nirupalepa (“unsullied”).
- n.403 A scribal error here (KPD, vol. 27, p. 488, lines 13–14) inserts “the four meditative concentrations are discerned [in this perfection of wisdom], as are the four immeasurable attitudes, and the four formless absorptions ...” (bsam gtan bzhi yod do/ tshad med bzhi dang / gzugs med pa'i snyoms par 'jug pa bzhi yod do). The same terms are correctly found in sequence, in the last two lines of the same page.
- n.404 Chapter 29 here marks the start of the fourth abhisamaya. Our text concurs with Kimura IV: p. 1, line 1 (and Conze 1975: p. 312) in reading ma mchis pa for asat (“nonexistent”). The Ten Thousand, by contrast, reads mtha' yas pa / ananta (“infinite”).
- n.405 Tib. byang zhing zad pa'i phyir. Kimura IV: p. 1, line 25, reads atyanta kṣayakṣīnatāṃ upādāya, which Conze 1975: p. 312 renders as “because all dharmas are extinguished in absolute extinction.”
- n.406 Tib. 'chi ba dang skye ba dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 2, which reads cyuty upapattyanupalabdhitāṃ upādāya.

- n.407 chu ' bab pa. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 2, line 23 which reads udakaskandha (Conze 1975: p. 313: "mass of water").
- n.408 gnas pa. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 2, line 31, which reads ākāśa (Conze 1975: p. 313: "space").
- n.409 ma nor ba yang dag pa nyid du mngon par 'tshang rgya bar byed pa'i phyir. Cf. the Ten Thousand: phyin ci log par rtogs pa'i phyir ("owing to incontrovertible realization"). Kimura IV: p. 3, line 5, by contrast reads virāgānupalabdhitāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 313: "because its dispassion cannot be apprehended").
- n.410 "Without obsession" (kun nas ldang ba ma mchis pa; paryupasthāna). Cf. Kimura IV: p. 3, which reads asthāna (Conze 1975: p. 313: "which takes its stand nowhere").
- n.411 mtshan ma med cing dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 3, which reads avitathatā'bhisam̐bhodhitāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 313: "because the nonfalseness [of all phenomena] is not fully understood").
- n.412 rab tu spangs pa ("forsaken"). Cf. the Ten Thousand, which reads: spang du ma mchis pa ("unforsaken"). Kimura IV: p. 3, line 22 reads apramāṇa (Conze 1975: p. 314: "unlimited").
- n.413 chags pa med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: 4 p., which reads ākāśasvabhāvasamatāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 314: "because [all dharmas] in their own-being are the same as space").
- n.414 dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 4, which reads sarvaniḥphalārthatāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 314: "because it brings forth no fruits").
- n.415 mngon par grub pa med pa'i phyir. Cf. the Ten Thousand, which reads ldog pa med pa nyid kyi phyir. Kimura IV: p. 4, which reads ānimittatāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 314: "because [all dharmas] are signless").
- n.416 'dus byas dang 'dus ma byas kyi chos dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 5, which reads simply prakṛtiśūnyatā'nupalabdhitāṃ upādāya ("owing to the nonapprehension of the emptiness of inherent existence").
- n.417 On this entire exchange, compare the variant readings listed above, in Kimura IV: pp. 1–5; also Conze 1975: pp. 312–15.
- n.418 stong pa nyid kyi rnam pa dang rnam par dben pa'i rnam pa dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 6, which reads dr̥ṣṭīkṛtānupalabdhitāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 316: "because no false views are apprehended.").

- n.419 zhi ba'i rnam pa dmigs su med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 6, which reads vitarkānupalabdhitāṃ upādāya (Conze 1975: p. 316: “because no discourings are apprehended.”).
- n.420 gnod sems dang bzod pa dmigs su med pa'i phyir. See Kimura IV: p. 7: vyāpādānupalabdhitāṃ upādāya; also Conze 1875: p. 316: “because no ill will is apprehended.”
- n.421 chos thams cad thub pa med pa'i phyir. Kimura IV: p. 7: sarvadharmānupalabdhitāṃ upādāya; also Conze 1975: p. 316: “on account of the nonapprehension of all dharmas.”
- n.422 lam gyi rnam pa shes pa nyid kyi ye shes zhun pa med pa'i phyir. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 7, which reads only mārgajñatā'navalīnatām upādāya (also Conze 1975: p. 316: “on account of the uncowedness in the knowledge of all the modes of the path”).
- n.423 brjod pa thams cad kyi de bzhin nyid kyi phyir. Cf. the Ten Thousand: skad thams cad du de bzhin du gsung ba'i chos nyid yin pa'i phyir. Kimura IV: p. 8 reads sarva-buddhabhāṣitatathtām upādāya (also Conze 1975: p. 317: “on account of the suchness that is taught by all the buddhas”).
- n.424 Cf. Kimura IV: p. 8: sarvadharmasarvākārabhisambodhanatām upādāya; also Conze 1975: p. 317.
- n.425 Conze 1975: p. 319 follows Kimura IV: p. 11, line 21: rūpe na yogam āpadyate (“they do not persevere with regard to physical forms”). Our text, which reads gzugs la brtson par byed pa yin no ..., mistakenly omits the negative particle here, and throughout this paragraph.
- n.426 The Tibetan text has Subhūti here but this is clearly a non sequitur.
- n.427 de bzhin nyid du. This expression could mean either “in an authentic manner,” or “in accordance with the real nature.”
- n.428 Here we have followed the Sanskrit dātrī (Kimura IV: p. 24, line 26) rather than the Tibetan sgrub pa (“achieves”).
- n.429 de bzhin du. The alternative reading, de bzhin nyid du which is found in the Narthang, Choné and Lhasa editions, could be rendered “in accordance with the real nature.”
- n.430 On the early associations of South India with this tradition, see Introduction i.7.

- n.431 See Introduction i.7.
- n.432 Inga brgya tha ma. This specific phrase is missing in Kimura IV: p. 29. According to traditional calculations, the duration of the Buddhist teaching promulgated by the Buddha Śākyamuni is held to be five thousand years, divided into ten periods of five hundred years each. In the first period there was a profusion of arhats, so it was called the period of arhats. The second is called the period of those no longer subject to rebirth, and the third the period of those entering the stream to nirvāṇa. These three periods together are called the Age of Fruition or enlightenment. In the fourth period there is a predominance of wisdom, therefore it is so called. The fifth is called the period of meditative stability, and the sixth the period of ethical discipline. These three periods together are called the Age of Attainment. The next three periods of Abhidharma, Sūtra, and Vinaya are collectively known as the Age of Transmission. The tenth and final period is called the Age of Convention or Symbols because at that point the actual practice of the path will be lost, and only conventional tokens of going forth will remain. See also Stein and Zangpo (2013), pp. 209–15.
- n.433 Our text reads yongs su 'dzin pa (“occupy”), but see Kimura IV: p. 34, pariśodhayiṣyanti.
- n.434 Our text reads 'dri na (“if they question”), but see Kimura IV: p. 34, likhiṣyanti.
- n.435 This reading (glang po'i rjes) appears to make better sense than Kimura IV: hastipadaṃ (Conze 1975: p. 334), unless the latter implies “the footprint of an elephant.”
- n.436 Builder (phywa mkhan, or in Yongle and in the Degé Hundred Thousand, phyu mkhan) usually renders Skt. sthapati. Kimura IV: p. 29, line 15 reads palagaṇḍa (“mason”). The Eighteen Thousand (40.37) has Tib. shing mkhan.
- n.437 Kimura IV: p. 44 reads saṃtuṣṭaḥ pravivikta (“contented and withdrawn”). Cf. Conze 1975: p. 338.
- n.438 Kimura IV: p. 44 reads saṃtuṣṭaḥ pravivikta (“contented and withdrawn”). Cf. Conze 1975: p. 338.
- n.439 On these ascetic virtues, see Dudjom Rinpoche 1991 vol. 2: p. 169.
- n.440 Kimura IV: p. 54 reads na rūpaṃ saṃvidyate (“physical forms are not discerned”).
- n.441 Our text (KPD, p. 609, lines 5–6) suggests they “will not encounter obstacles” (bar chad tu 'gyur ba med do), which runs counter to the sense of this passage.

- n.442 At this point in the text the Eighteen Thousand has a chapter division, between the end of chapter 41 and the beginning of chapter 42 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh10.html#UT22084-029-001-chapter-42>).
- n.443 Our text (KPD, p. 614) omits the negative particle in this and the following statements., but see Kimura IV: p. 57; also Conze 1975: p. 344.
- n.444 By contrast, Kimura IV: p. 61 lines 17–19 reads more simply: yā cittasya vīgatarāgatā na sā cittasya sarāgatā. tat kasya hetor? na hi dvayoś cittayoḥ samavidhānam asti. (Conze 1975: p. 348: “A thought marked by the absence of greed is not a thought marked by its presence. And why? Because there can be no meeting of two thoughts.”)
- n.445 sdug bsngal sel ba. Kimura IV: p. 70: line 4 reads anābhoga, i.e., don du gnyer ba med pa (“nonstriving”).
- n.446 The krośa (rgyang grags, “earshot”) is a measurement traditionally equivalent to five hundred arm spans.
- n.447 de dag sbyin pa rlom sems su byed/sbyin pa des rlom sems su byed/spyin pa la slom sems su byed do. Cf. Kimura IV: 91, which reads: sa tena dānena manyate | tad dānaṃ manyate | dānaṃ mameti manyate.
- n.448 The four modes of blessing (byin gyi rlabs bzhi) are omitted in Kimura IV: p. 100, line 2. As stated in Nordrang Orgyan 2008: p. 798, they comprise (1) the blessing of truth (bden pa'i byin rlabs) consequent on having understood the truth of suffering, (2) the blessing of renunciation (gtong ba'i byin rlabs) consequent on having renounced the cause of suffering, (3) the blessing of being at peace (nye bar zhi ba'i byig rlabs) consequent on having actualized the truth of cessation, and (4) the blessing of wisdom (shes rab kyi byin rlabs) consequent on having cultivated the truth of the path.
- n.449 The four modes of improper perspective (caturgamana, tshul ma yin pa bzhi) are not enumerated in Kimura IV: p. 100, line 10. They are said to be equivalent to the four misconceptions (phyin ci log bzhi), namely the perception of impermanence as permanence, the perception of suffering as happiness, the perception of nonself as self, and the perception of unpleasant phenomena as pleasant. See Nordrang Orgyan 2008: p. 730.
- n.450 This reading accords with the Ten Thousand, 22.29, which would seem to be correct in the present context. By contrast, Kimura IV: p. 103 omits the negative particle and reads ātmagatika, as does our text (KPD vol. 27, p. 722, lines 15–16: chos thams cad ni bdag gi ngang tshul can). Conze, following Kimura, reads “they are situated in the self.”

- n.451 Omitted in our text but included in Kimura. See previous note.
- n.452 Sanskrit bhāvanāvibhāvanā, rendered as bsgom pa rnam par 'jig pa, literally “the destruction of cultivation,” in the Tibetan translations of the other long versions of the sūtra except here and in the Hundred Thousand, where it is bsgom pa rnam par bsgom pa, suggesting more an analysis or investigation of cultivation rather than its destruction or negation. See n.265 for further details. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 109; also Conze 1975: p. 135 n12 and p. 373. Ratnākarakāṣānti also reads avibhāvitam aprahīṇam. no hīti nāprahīṇam | prahīṇam evety arthaḥ |. Here the double negative suggests a reading akin to the sense of deconstruction, etc.
- n.453 The expression “calm, subtle, and delicate” (zhi zhing phra ba zhib mo) is omitted in Kimura IV: p. 115, but is found two pages later, p. 117, lines 1–2.
- n.454 The expression phrin las chung ba la thugs gzhol te, here rendered as “mind inclined toward carefree inaction,” corresponds to Kimura IV: p. 115, which reads alpotsukatāyāṃ cittam. Edgerton 1953: p. 69 interprets this to mean “unconcerned mind,” “unworried mind,” or “indifferent mind.” In any case, it denotes the silence and stillness of the Lord Buddha during the weeks that immediately followed his attainment of buddhahood, as he considered whether to teach or not to teach.
- n.455 bdag gi gzugs so. Cf. Kimura IV: p. 118, mama rūpaṃ, which Conze 1975: p. 377, renders as “mine is form.”
- n.456 This reading follows the Tibetan: de dag 'du shes sna tshogs kyis spyod pas tha mi dad pas ma dmigs pa'i phyir. Kimura IV: p. 125, line 25 reads nānātvasaṃjñānāṃ caranto nānātvoṣalabdhyā (“they engage with diverse notions owing to their apprehending of differentiation”). Conze (1975: p. 379), on the other hand, interprets this as nānātmasaṃjñānāṃ caranto nānātmopalabdhyā, “coursing in the notion of not-self and the nonapprehension of not-self.”
- n.457 This reading follows the Yongle, Peking, and Choné versions, in which the negative particle ma is omitted. Kimura IV: p. 128, last line, and p. 129, first line, concurs, as does Conze 1975: p. 382. Our text (KPD vol. 27, p. 780, line 15) by contrast reads: the tshom ma mchis pa lags.
- n.458 As explained in the paragraphs that follow, they comprise those who follow the vehicle of the śrāvakas, those who follow the vehicle of the pratyekabuddhas, and those who follow the vehicle of the buddhas.

- n.459 Kimura IV: p. 135, line 10, reads puruṣa (“manly”) for paruṣa (“coarse”).
- n.460 On the eight great hells (aṣṭamahāniraya, dmyal ba chen po brgyad), see Patrul Rinpoche (1994): pp. 63–69.
- n.461 The four norms of behavior (catvāra īryāpathāḥ, spyod lam bzhi) are walking, standing, sitting, and lying down. See Nordrang Urgyen 2008, pp. 718–19.
- n.462 While the Ten Thousand, 31.47, speaks of five hundred attendants of Vajrapāṇi’s family, more generally, the Sanskrit reference is to the “five families of Vajrapāṇi” (pañcavajrapāṇīkulāni).
- n.463 This passage is missing in Kimura IV: p. 162; but see Conze 1975: p. 403. The first of these, the akṣayakaraṇḍadhāraṇī (mi zad pa’i za ma tog gi gzungs) and its benefits are discussed in a long passage comprising chapters 3 and 4 of The Questions of the Nāga King Sāgara (1) (Sāgaranāgarājaparipṛcchā, Toh 153), from 3.8 to 4.53, with the actual Sanskrit syllables of the dhāraṇī in 4.11. Another interpretation of its inexhaustible applications in terms of all phenomena is found in The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata (Tathāgatamahākaruṇānirdeśasūtra, Toh 147), at 2.546–2.554. The corresponding meditative stability is numbered twenty-nine in the list presented above, 8.247. The second has the full title sarvadharmasamavasaraṇasāgaramudrā (chos thams cad yang dag par ’du ba rgya mtsho’i phyag rgya). It comprises the forty-three arapacana syllables or letters, embracing all nuances of the Dharma, which are explained individually in The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata, at 2.558–2.561 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh147.html#UT22084-057-006-747>). The corresponding meditative stability is numbered twenty-one in the aforementioned list. The third is the padmavyūhādhāraṇī (padma bkod pa’i gzungs). We have not yet located the actual Sanskrit syllables of this dhāraṇī in the Kangyur, but its purport in highlighting the diversity of the twelve branches of the scriptures and so forth is described in The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata, at 2.562–2.564 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh147.html#UT22084-057-006-751>). All three dhāraṇīs are listed in the Mahāvīyutpatti (nos. 750, 752, and 753). For an analysis of the relationship between the Mahāvīyutpatti entries and the relevant sūtra sources, especially The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata and The Jewel Cloud (Ratnameghasūtra, Toh 231 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh231.html>)), see Pagel 2007, pp. 151–91.
- n.464 Kimura IV: p. 176, reads “would become the very limit of reality” (bhūtakoṭīr bhaviṣyati).

- n.465 Our text suggests that this is a statement rather than a question, but here we have followed Kimura IV: p. 178, lines 2–3, where Lord Buddha clearly asks how bodhisattvas annihilate the perception of conceptual images or nonconceptual images. Cf. Conze 1975: p. 414.
- n.466 Here we have followed the Peking edition, which omits the second instrumental phrase gang gis lan glan pa. See KPD vol. 27, p. 880, note 2. Kimura IV: p. 180, lines 18–20 also presents only these three alternatives.
- n.467 Tib. zla ba dang yud du yan man. Kimura IV: p. 187, line 5 reads “fortnight” (ardhamāsa). Cf. Conze: p. 420 and the Ten Thousand, 24.37.
- n.468 Kimura IV: p. 192, reads parijaya kartavyaḥ—hence “make a complete conquest of” (Conze 1975: p. 424).
- n.469 The sixty-four crafts (catuḥṣaṣṭīkalā, sgyu rtsal drug cu rtsa bzhi) and what are usually known as the “eighteen great topics of knowledge” (aṣṭādaśavidyāsthāna, rigs gnas chen po bco brgyad) are all enumerated by Jamgon Kongtrul in Dorje (trans.) 2012: pp. 313–315 and 311, respectively. Here the Tibetan for the latter set reads las kyi gnas (karmasthāna) while the Ten Thousand reads “eighteen great topics of knowledge” with the Tibetan as above.
- n.470 Cf. Kimura IV: p. 201; also Conze 1975: p. 430. This paragraph marks the end of the fourth abhisamaya.
- n.471 Kimura V: p. 5: tvam āgato. Missing in KPD vol. 28, p. 41.
- n.472 The negative is missing in KPD, vol. 28, p. 46, but see Kimura V: p. 8, line 15, na.
- n.473 See n.108 and glossary entry for “Ābhāsvara.”
- n.474 See n.392.
- n.475 Cf. Kimura V: p. 30; also Conze 1975: p. 454. This paragraph refers to the eight states lacking freedom for Buddhist practice.
- n.476 The equivalent passage in the Ten Thousand, 26.9 (F.289.b), reads sems su mi 'gyur zhing sems las gzhan du spyod par mi 'gyur ba.
- n.477 At this point the Tibetan and “recast” Sanskrit diverge—the immediately following paragraphs correspond to Kimura V: pp. 44–50, and the paragraphs corresponding to Kimura V: pp. 38–44 follow later.
- n.478 The Tibetan in this and the immediately following paragraphs corresponds to Kimura V: pp. 38–44.

- n.479 The Ten Thousand, 26.34 (F.294.a), adds chos. Cf. Kimura V: p. 39; also Conze 1975: p. 462.
- n.480 Unlocated in Kimura V: p. 44, but see Conze 1975: p. 466.
- n.481 The ending of this paragraph corresponds to Kimura V: p. 44, line 26.
- n.482 KPD vol. 28 p. 186, line 20 reads bdag las ci zhig bcad do, corresponding to Kimura V, p. 91, line 16: ko me cchinnatti.
- n.483 The full listing is given earlier in the text at 2.235.
- n.484 Cf. Kimura V: p. 100; also Conze 1975: p. 501. On these eight aspects of liberation, see 8.36.
- n.485 Cf. Kimura V: pp. 100–1; also Conze 1975: p. 501. On the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, see 8.37.
- n.486 From this point the corresponding Sanskrit text is found in Kimura V: p. 50, commencing on line 12 and continuing through to Kimura V: p. 66, line 16.
- n.487 Conze 1975: p. 470 reverses this in a way that contradicts the Tibetan (KPD, p. 214, lines 11–13).
- n.488 Note that Kimura V: pp. 60–61 presents these in a slightly dissimilar sequence, with all the attributes of physical forms preceding those of the other aggregates, etc.
- n.489 The Tibetan here follows Kimura V: p. 61, lines 8–9 (na hi svabhāvaḥ svabhāvena sākya'bhiniharaṇāya). Cf. Conze 1975: p. 477: “An own being which is empty of own being is incapable of consummation.”
- n.490 This follows Kimura V: p. 62, line 27.
- n.491 The expression kelāyitavyam, gnod pa gsal could also imply that they should ward off blight.
- n.492 From this point onward, the Tibetan corresponds to the Sanskrit commencing in Kimura V: p. 104, line 19.
- n.493 Note the double negative: rtogs par mi 'gyur ba med do.
- n.494 This follows Kimura V: p. 108, line 27: rūpapariniṣpatti. The Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 261) reads gzungs (“dhāraṇī”).
- n.495 This is at variance with the Sanskrit (Kimura V: p. 111, line 6) which reads: ākāśasūnyatābhāvanayā. (“through the cultivation of the emptiness of space”).

- n.496 Kimura V: p. 112, line 28 reads aprajñāpanīya (“inconceivable”), although KPD vol. 28, p. 271, reads gnyis su med pa.
- n.497 The Tibetan here lacks the corresponding definition of nonduality, on which see Kimura V: p. 116, lines 29–30; also Conze 1975: p. 512.
- n.498 The Sanskrit reads ṛddhiparyāye (“by means of miraculous powers”).
- n.499 To appreciate the glossing of the elements of the term prajñāpāramitā in this paragraph, much of which is lost in translation (as it is even in Tibetan), the reader should bear in mind that throughout this text we have rendered prajñāpāramitā as the “perfection of wisdom” for the sake of brevity and simplicity, although paramita can also be rendered as “transcendence,” or more fully as “transcendent perfection.”
- n.500 Kimura V: p. 128, line 10 reads samudayaprahāṇārtha.
- n.501 Kimura V: p. 128, line 11 reads nirodhasākṣātkriyārtha.
- n.502 Here the Tibetan reads yongs su rtog pa shes pa, where in all other instances of this series of kinds of knowledge, the knowledge is 'dris pa shes pa.
- n.503 Tib. sems can du 'dzin pa. Kimura V: p. 130, line 19 simply reads saṃsārāt (“from cyclic existence”).
- n.504 The text (KPD vol. 28, p. 312) follows brgya stong gi cha with brgya phrag stong gi cha. Kimura V: p. 133, line 13, reads only śatasahasra.
- n.505 Repeated for emphasis.
- n.506 Kimura V: p. 139 line 33: dhāraṇyāṃ carati. Also Conze 1975: p. 530. Our text (KPD vol. 28, p. 329) misreads gzugs.
- n.507 Repeated for emphasis.
- n.508 Repeated for emphasis.
- n.509 See n.108 and glossary entry for “Ābhāsvara.”
- n.510 The expression 'phags pa'i chos dang 'dul ba is repeated for emphasis (KPD vol. 28, p. 369). However, Kimura V: p. 158, line 22 suggests that Subhūti is asking about the extent of both the Dharma of the noble ones and that which is not of the noble ones (anāryadharamavinaya).
- n.511 The negative particle is missing in the Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 374, line 1), but included in Kimura V: p. 160, line 25, who also notes that it is missing in the Tibetan.

- n.512 This passage (KPD vol. 28, p. 387, lines 12...) seems to be at variance with Kimura V: p. 165, lines 18–28 and with Conze 1975: p. 546.
- n.513 Here the Tibetan repeats the line: “I would focus my mind on actualizing the knowledge of clairvoyance.”
- n.514 The three categories (trivāṣī, phung po gsum) are, at the time of a buddha’s awakening, those whose receptivity to the teaching is certain, those whose receptivity is unpredictable (i.e., they may or may not benefit from it), and those whose nonreceptivity is certain and are sure not to benefit from it. During the period of a buddha’s teaching many in the second category can be shifted to the first. See also 42.24. The Buddha’s observations of these categories are recounted in The Play in Full (Lalitavistara, Toh 95), see Dharmachakra Translation Committee 2013, 25.47–48 (<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh95.html#UT22084-046-001-2051>). See also The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata (Tathāgatamahākaruṇā-nirdeśa, Toh 147) 2.318 et seq.
- n.515 This paragraph marks the conclusion of the fifth abhisamaya.
- n.516 Kimura VI: p. 12, line 22, reads duḥkhākṣayaś for rgya chung (“feeble”).
- n.517 This paragraph marks the end of the sixth abhisamaya.
- n.518 Repetition omitted here.
- n.519 This reading follows Kimura VII: p. 20, line 25: tena śrutena. Conze 1975: p. 558 concurs: “as a result of what he has heard...” Our text (KPD vol. 28, p. 442, lines 5–6) reads thob pa des for thos pa de.
- n.520 In all Kangyurs the verb here is sems pa med, while in the long sentences that follow it is bsnyems pa med or snyems pa med in Kangyurs of the Tshalpa line, but sems pa med in the Stok Palace Kangyur. Kimura’s Sanskrit (VII: 23–24) has na parāmrṣati throughout.
- n.521 This reading follows Kimura VII: p. 24, line 12: darśanabhūmi, whereas our text reads “path of insight” (mtshong ba’i lam).
- n.522 This reading follows the Narthang, Lhasa, and Stok Palace Kangyurs: ngo bo nyid med. The Degé and other Kangyurs omit the negative med. Kimura’s Sanskrit (VII: 24) reads tathā hi teṣāṃ svabhāvo na saṃvidyate, yena svabhāvena prabhāvoyeran.

- n.523 The conventional ethical disciplines (sāṅketikaśīla, brda can gyi tshul khrims) comprise the vows adopted by monks, the novitiate, and the laity.
- n.524 Cf. Kimura VI-VIII: p. 31 instead reads vijñaptiśīla, which may correspond to the conventional ethical disciplines mentioned in the previous line.
- n.525 On these six ways, see 38.36; also n.268.
- n.526 The Tibetan here is ting nge 'dzin kyi pha rol tu phyin pa, in lieu of bsam gtan gyi pha rol tu phyin pa.
- n.527 This completes the seventh abhisamaya.
- n.528 This passage marks the start of the eighth abhisamaya. Kimura VIII: p. 43 line 1 to p. 44 line 4, includes a section on the buddha body of essentiality, the buddha body of perfect resource, and the buddha body of emanation, which is omitted in the Tibetan.
- n.529 This accords with Kimura VIII: p. 52, line 27, which reads ātmamāṃsam. The Tibetan has bdag po.
- n.530 Cf. Kimura VI-VIII: p. 55; also Conze 1975: p. 579.
- n.531 This listing of the eight sense fields of mastery and the ten total saturations of the elements is also translated in Konow 1941: pp. 28–30, with reconstructed Sanskrit on pp. 101–2. Cf. Sparham 2012 IV: pp. 70–76. Among them, the eight sense fields of mastery originate through engagement with the aforementioned eight aspects of liberation. See Negi 1993–2005: p. 5395 (vimokṣapraveśikānyabhibhvāyatanāni, zil gyis gnon pa'i skye mched rnam ni rnam par thar pa 'jug pa las byung ba can yin la). They are the basis for the control and transcendence of the realm of desire. See Nāṇamoli 1979: p. 866.
- n.532 This distinction between subtle and gross external forms is made not on the basis of physical size but with reference to their impact on consciousness. See Bodhi 1993: p. 153. Some sources (e.g., Longchen Rabjam in Dorje 1987: p. 374) more explicitly distinguish greater and lesser external forms on the basis of sentience and nonsentience.
- n.533 The order of powers (8) and (9) are reversed from the order they were presented earlier at 9.37. See also g.275 and g.281.
- n.534 See the glossary entry “four fearlessnesses” for notes and comparative references to this set.

- n.535 Cf. Kimura VI-VIII: p. 59; also Conze 1975: p. 583. On these four kinds of exact knowledge, see 9.42.
- n.536 In the Ten Thousand, 2.68, this is presented as number 69 in the list of minor marks.
- n.537 See previous note n.536.
- n.538 The list of the eighty minor marks that follows is very similar to the list in the Mahāvīyūtpatti (349), the only differences being two pairs of items in reversed order and some differences in the terms used, the list in the present text reflecting perhaps a more archaic lexicon later revised. See also the following note n.539.
- n.539 On the discrepancies between the various listings of the thirty-two major marks and eighty minor marks, see the corresponding notes in our translation of the Ten Thousand 2.15–2.72, in particular n.63 and n.66. Cf. also Kimura VI-VIII: pp. 64–67; Conze 1975: pp. 586–87.
- n.540 Cf. Conze 1975: p. 586. Missing in Kimura VIII: p. 67.
- n.541 Cf. Conze 1975: p. 586. Missing in Kimura VIII: p. 67.
- n.542 Cf. Conze 1975: p. 586. Missing in Kimura VIII: p. 67.
- n.543 These are the basic forty-two vocalic and consonantal syllables of the Sanskrit language, on which see Jamgon Kongtrul’s presentation in Dorje 2012: pp. 108–12.
- n.544 Kimura VI-VIII: p. 68, line 17 simply reads “all aspects of emptiness” (sarvaśūnyatā).
- n.545 Note that the last three—the meditative concentrations, the immeasurable attitudes, and the formless absorptions (KPD vol. 28, p. 557)—have already been detailed in this sentence.
- n.546 See Kimura VI-VIII: p. 80, line 13. The Tibetan shin tu gsong ldong could also be interpreted to mean “utterly perforated.” Cf. Conze 1975: p. 594, “full of holes.”
- n.547 Alternatively, following the Ten Thousand, 30.10, it could read “and that liberation ensues from the [last] two truths of the noble ones (dvayato vinirmuktam āryasatyam, ‘phags pa’i bden pa rnam pa gnyis las rnam par grol ba). They also correctly know that [liberation] does not ensue from the [former] two truths of the noble ones (advayato vinirmuktam āryasatyam, ‘phags pa’i bden pa rnam pa gnyis ma yin par)." The present reading in the text accords with Kimura VI-VIII: p. 82, which reads: dvayato vinirmuktam āryasatyam, advayato vinirmuktam āryasatyam; also Conze 1975: p. 595.

- n.548 The negative particle ma is missing in the Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 607, line 19).
- n.549 Conze 1975: p. 602 concurs: "he reviews all dharmas as unobscured." KPD vol. 28, p. 608, note 3 also suggests the alternative reading yang dag par rjes su mi mthong ngo.
- n.550 The text (KPD vol. 28, p. 701) misreads mi mnyam pa'i chos nyid, but see Dutt 1934, p. 243.
- n.551 This phrase, tadā syād eṣa doṣaḥ (Kimura VIII: p. 110, line 27), is missing in the Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 643, line 1).
- n.552 The rest of this paragraph and the next are translated from a passage missing in the Degé but found in the Yongle and Peking Kangyurs. It is reproduced in KPD vol. 28, p. 659, note 8.
- n.553 Here ends the missing passage mentioned in the preceding note.
- n.554 The translation here follows the Sanskrit (Kimura VI-VIII: p. 119, lines 29–30): iyanta iti vā neyanta iti vā. The corresponding Tibetan 'di snyed do zhes bgyis ba'am 'di dag go zhes bgyi ba (KPD vol. 28, p. 663, line 7) omits the negative particle.
- n.555 KPD vol. 28, p. 666, line 3: kye ma sems can de dag ni yang dag pa ma yin pa'i 'dzin pa las dgrol bar bya na dka' ba byed do. Note that the Ten Thousand suggests "easy" rather than "difficult." Kimura VIII: p. 121, line 4, by contrast, reads sumocanā bateme sattvā asaṃgrahāt, which Conze 1975: p. 616 translates as "Well freed, surely, are those beings from seizing on that which is not."
- n.556 On this meditative stability, see 2.239.
- n.557 This reading follows Kimura VIII: p. 127, line 25: bhojanāni. The Tibetan here reads mnabs stsal ("clothing").
- n.558 This reading of byug pa follows the Narthang edition (KPD vol. 28, p. 678, note 7), in contrast to the reading "tangibles" (spraṣṭavyāni).
- n.559 That is to say, their beautiful forms (abhirūpa prasādika, lus mdzes pa) may gravitate toward the major and minor marks.

- n.560 This passage describes how the category of those whose receptivity is certain (niyataraṣī, nges pa'i phung po) is replenished from the other two of the three categories of beings.
- n.561 That is to say, the mistaken view that, owing to emptiness, engagement in virtuous acts is to be avoided.
- n.562 This reading of “joy” (prīti, dga' ba) follows Kimura VIII: p. 133, line 10. The Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 688, line 10) reads dge ba.
- n.563 This is the meditation on repulsive phenomena (aśubhabhāvanā, mi sdug pa 'i sgom) as an antidote for desire. Note that Kimura reads śubha for aśubha.
- n.564 At this point the Sanskrit text includes the Maitreya chapter as found in Kimura VIII: p. 145 line 28 through p. 157 end. The Tibetan text includes this below, in chapter 72. Conze follows the Tibetan order.
- n.565 This is the predominant reading, found in the Yongle, Beijing, Narthang, and Lhasa editions, although the negative particle is omitted in the Degé. See KPD vol. 28, p. 729, note 2.
- n.566 This is the first time in the text that the ten perfections are listed rather than the six.
- n.567 By contrast, Kimura VIII: p. 177, line 28, reads nirmito 'anyan nirmitaṃ nirminoti (“if some phantom emanation were to conjure up another emanation”). Conze 1975: p. 642 concurs.
- n.568 Kimura VII: p. 145, line 29 adds yadi abhāvasvabhāvāḥ sarvadharmās (“if all phenomena are of the essential nature of nonentity”). See also Conze 1975: p. 644.
- n.569 This reading follows Kimura (VIII: p. 147, line 10): na prayujyate. The Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 765, lines 4–5) reads mi rigs so (“it would be improper [to say]”).
- n.570 Thanks to Tom Tillemans for his comments on this passage where the Sanskrit and Tibetan diverge. The objection made by Maitreya is that language cannot properly be used if it never denotes any real entities and is simply fictitious.
- n.571 The Sanskrit here (Kimura VIII: p. 147, line 13 ff.) suggests that the comments that follow are made directly by Lord Buddha without the further intervention of Maitreya, as stated in the Tibetan.

- n.572 Kimura VIII: p. 149, line 5 adds upalabdha.
- n.573 This follows the Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 773, line 18): ma lags. Kimura VIII: p. 150, line 30 reads evam, and Conze 1975: p. 647 concurs: "So it is."
- n.574 As far as the expression "the nonduality of nonentities and entities" (bhāvābhāvādvāyatā, dngos med dang dngos po gnyis su med pa) is concerned, here we follow Kimura VIII: p. 167, line 23. The Tibetan (KPD vol. 28, p. 784, line 3) reads sgom pa dang dngos po gnyis su med pa.
- n.575 At this point our text reaches the end of the Sanskrit version (Kimura VIII: p. 157).
- n.576 The last four chapters of the text correspond, not to the Sanskrit editions of Dutt/Kimura, but to Vaidya's Sanskrit edition of the Sūtra of the Perfection of Wisdom in Eight Thousand Lines (Aṣṭasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitāsūtra, Toh 12). They concern the exemplary sacrifices of the great bodhisattva being, Sadāprarudita, and form a self-contained appendix. The Sanskrit can be found in Vaidya: pp. 238–64, and the translation is contained in Conze 1973, p. 277 ff.
- n.577 The Tibetan (Degé) reads stong phrag drug cu ("sixty thousand"), but according to KPD vol. 28, p. 839, note 3, the number of meditative stabilities is stated in the Yongle, Beijing, Narthang, Choné, and Lhasa editions to be six million (brgya stong phrag drug cu). Conze 1973: p. 298 concurs with the latter.
- n.578 This quatrain is characterized by repetition of the second syllable of each line.
- n.579 This quatrain is characterized by repetition of the last syllable of each line in the first syllable of the following line.
- n.580 This stanza is characterized by repetition in the first two syllables of each line.

snyoms par 'jug · mnyam par bzhag

སློམས་པར་འཇུག་ · མཉམ་པར་བཞག་

samāpatti · samāhita

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Sanskrit literally means “attainment,” and is used to refer specifically to meditative attainment and to particular meditative states. The Tibetan translators interpreted it as sama-āpatti, which suggests the idea of “equal” or “level”; however, they also parsed it as sam-āpatti, in which case it would have the sense of “concentration” or “absorption,” much like samādhi, but with the added sense of “attainment.”

In this text:

Also rendered here as “meditative absorption.”

g.24 acceptance that phenomena are nonarising

mi skye ba'i chos la bzod pa

མི་སྐྱེ་བའི་ཚོས་ལ་བཟོད་པ།

anutapattikadharmakṣānti

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The bodhisattvas’ realization that all phenomena are unproduced and empty. It sustains them on the difficult path of benefiting all beings so that they do not succumb to the goal of personal liberation. Different sources link this realization to the first or eighth bodhisattva level (bhūmi).

g.25 accepted

yongs su zin pa

ཡོངས་སུ་ཟེན་པ།

parigrhīta

Also translated here as “favored.”

g.26 accumulation of all attributes

yon tan thams cad kyi tshogs su gyur pa

ཡོན་ཏན་ཐམས་ཅད་ཀྱི་ཚོགས་སུ་གྱུར་པ། sarvagūṇasaṃcaya

The 78th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.27 acquired on the basis of the true nature

chos nyid kyis thob pa

ཚོས་ཉིད་ཀྱིས་ཐོབ་པ།

dharmatāpratīlambhika

The acquisition of vows through direct insight into the nature of reality rather than through formal ceremony.

Fourteenth of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.53 all-aspect omniscience

rnam pa thams cad mkhyen pa nyid

རྣམ་པ་ཐམས་ཅད་མཁྱེན་པ་ཉིད།

sarvākārajñatā

This key term in the Prajñāpāramitā literature refers to the omniscience of a buddha, and is not to be confused with the “knowledge of the path” of bodhisattvas, or with the “knowledge of all the dharmas” of śrāvakas. The “all-aspect” (sarvākāra) part of the term refers to the different aspects that it comprises, and is explained in two ways in The Long Explanation (Toh 3808, 4-78–4.80). One way identifies the “aspects” as being qualities such as nonarising and unproduced, unceasing, primordially at peace, naturally in nirvāṇa, without intrinsic nature, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, etc. The other way identifies them as being the collections of the wholesome, unwholesome, and neutral, and the collection of those destined for error and those of uncertain destiny. All-aspect omniscience is also the first of the eight progressive sections of clear realization.

g.54 all-aspect omniscience in all its finest aspects

rnam pa thams cad mkhyen pa'i ye shes rnam pa'i mchog thams cad dang ldan pa

རྣམ་པ་ཐམས་ཅད་མཁྱེན་པའི་ཡེ་ཤེས་རྣམ་པའི་མཚོག་ཐམས་ཅད་དང་ལྡན་པ།

The “finest aspect(s)” are, according to the two explanations in the Long Explanation (Toh 3808 4.77–4.80, see “knowledge of all aspects”), either (in the first explanation) emptiness, as the root of all the other aspects, or (in the second explanation) the aspects that are included in the collections of the wholesome and those destined for what is right.

anabhraka

Literally meaning “Cloudless,” the more usual name for what is, in the Prajñāpāramitā literature, the fourteenth of the sixteen levels of the god realm of form that correspond to the four meditative concentrations, and in this text and in the Hundred Thousand is instead rendered Parīttabṛhat (q.v.). Anabhraka is used in the later Sanskrit manuscripts that correspond more closely to the eight-chapter Tengyur version of this text. In other genres, it is the tenth of twelve levels corresponding to the four meditative concentrations.

g.59 Ānanda

kun dga' bo

ཀུན་དགའ་བོ།

ānanda

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A major śrāvaka disciple and personal attendant of the Buddha Śākyamuni during the last twenty-five years of his life. He was a cousin of the Buddha (according to the Mahāvastu, he was a son of Śuklodana, one of the brothers of King Śuddhodana, which means he was a brother of Devadatta; other sources say he was a son of Amṛtodana, another brother of King Śuddhodana, which means he would have been a brother of Aniruddha).

Ānanda, having always been in the Buddha’s presence, is said to have memorized all the teachings he heard and is celebrated for having recited all the Buddha’s teachings by memory at the first council of the Buddhist saṅgha, thus preserving the teachings after the Buddha’s parinirvāṇa. The phrase “Thus did I hear at one time,” found at the beginning of the sūtras, usually stands for his recitation of the teachings. He became a patriarch after the passing of Mahākāśyapa.

- g.73 apprehend
dmigs དམིགས། upalabhate
 Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

dmigs (pa) translates a number of Sanskrit terms, including ālambana, upalabdhi, and ālambate. These terms commonly refer to the apprehending of a subject, an object, and the relationships that exist between them. The term may also be translated as “referentiality,” meaning a system based on the existence of referent objects, referent subjects, and the referential relationships that exist between them. As part of their doctrine of “threefold nonapprehending / nonreferentiality” (‘khor gsum mi dmigs pa), Mahāyāna Buddhists famously assert that all three categories of apprehending lack substantiality.

g.123 Bimbisāra

bi ma bi sA ra

བི་མ་བི་སྐ་ར།

bimbisāra

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The king of Magadha and a great patron of the Buddha. His birth coincided with the Buddha's, and his father, King Mahāpadma, named him "Essence of Gold" after mistakenly attributing the brilliant light that marked the Buddha's birth to the birth of his son by Queen Bimbī ("Goldie"). Accounts of Bimbisāra's youth and life can be found in The Chapter on Going Forth (Toh 1-1, Pravrajyāvastu).

King Śreṇya Bimbisāra first met with the Buddha early on, when the latter was the wandering mendicant known as Gautama. Impressed by his conduct, Bimbisāra offered to take Gautama into his court, but Gautama refused, and Bimbisāra wished him success in his quest for awakening and asked him to visit his palace after he had achieved his goal. One account of this episode can be found in the sixteenth chapter of The Play in Full (Toh 95, Lalitavistara). There are other accounts where the two meet earlier on in childhood; several episodes can be found, for example, in The Hundred Deeds (Toh 340, Karmaśataka).

Later, after the Buddha's awakening, Bimbisāra became one of his most famous patrons and donated to the saṅgha the Bamboo Grove, Veṇuvana, at the outskirts of the capital of Magadha, Rājagṛha, where he built residences for the monks. Bimbisāra was imprisoned and killed by his own son, the prince Ajātaśatru, who, influenced by Devadatta, sought to usurp his father's throne.

g.133 bodhisattva

byang chub sems dpa'

བྱང་ཚུབ་སེམས་དཔའ།

bodhisattva

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A being who is dedicated to the cultivation and fulfilment of the altruistic intention to attain perfect buddhahood, traversing the ten bodhisattva levels (daśabhūmi, sa bcu). Bodhisattvas purposely opt to remain within cyclic existence in order to liberate all sentient beings, instead of simply seeking personal freedom from suffering. In terms of the view, they realize both the selflessness of persons and the selflessness of phenomena.

g.134 bodhisattva great being byang chub sems dpa' sems dpa' chen po

བྱང་ཚུབ་སེམས་དཔའ་སེམས་དཔའ་ཆེན་པོ། bodhisattvamahāsattva

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The term can be understood to mean “great courageous one” or “great hero,” or (from the Sanskrit) simply “great being,” and is almost always found as an epithet of “bodhisattva.” The qualification “great” in this term, according to the majority of canonical definitions, focuses on the generic greatness common to all bodhisattvas, i.e., the greatness implicit in the bodhisattva vow itself in terms of outlook, aspiration, number of beings to be benefited, potential or eventual accomplishments, and so forth. In this sense the mahā- is closer in its connotations to the mahā- in “Mahāyāna” than to the mahā- in “mahāsiddha.” While individual bodhisattvas described as mahāsattva may in many cases also be “great” in terms of their level of realization, this is largely coincidental, and in the canonical texts the epithet is not restricted to bodhisattvas at any particular point in their career. Indeed, in a few cases even bodhisattvas whose path has taken a wrong direction are still described as bodhisattva mahāsattva.

Later commentarial writings do nevertheless define the term—variably—in terms of bodhisattvas having attained a particular level (bhūmi) or realization. The most common qualifying criteria mentioned are attaining the path of seeing, attaining irreversibility (according to its various definitions), or attaining the seventh bhūmi.

tshangs pa

ཚངས་པ།

brahmā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A high-ranking deity presiding over a divine world; he is also considered to be the lord of the Sahā world (our universe). Though not considered a creator god in Buddhism, Brahmā occupies an important place as one of two gods (the other being Indra/Śakra) said to have first exhorted the Buddha Śākyamuni to teach the Dharma. The particular heavens found in the form realm over which Brahmā rules are often some of the most sought-after realms of higher rebirth in Buddhist literature. Since there are many universes or world systems, there are also multiple Brahmās presiding over them. His most frequent epithets are “Lord of the Sahā World” (Sahāṃpati) and Great Brahmā (Mahābrahmā).

g.154 Brahmā realms

tshangs pa'i 'jig rten gyi khams

ཚངས་པའི་འཇིག་རྟེན་གྱི་འཁམས། brahmālokadhātu

g.162 breaking down of cultivation

bsgom pa rnam par bsgom pa

བསྐྱོམ་པ་རྣམ་པར་བསྐྱོམ་པ། bhāvanāṅvibhāvana

The Sanskrit term is rendered in this text and in the Hundred Thousand as bsgom pa rnam par bsgom pa, suggesting an analysis or investigation of cultivation rather than its destruction or negation, in contrast to its rendering as bsgom pa rnam par 'jig pa, literally “the destruction of cultivation,” in the Tibetan translations of the Ten Thousand, Eighteen Thousand, and the Tengyur version of the Twenty-Five Thousand. We have chosen “breaking down” in order to retain the widest range of possible meanings: “examination,” “analysis,” “exposure,” “deconstruction,” “destruction,” “annihilation,” “elimination,” or “unraveling,” with respect to false appearances. For more details, see n.265 and n.452.

g.163 Bṛhat

che ba

ཆེ་བ།

bṛhat

Thirteenth of the sixteen god realms of form that correspond to the four meditative concentrations, meaning “Great.”

cāritramati

Name of a bodhisattva from a distant world system in the western direction called Upaśāntā, who comes to this world to pay homage to the Buddha.

g.182 Caturmahārājakāyika

rgyal chen bzhi'i ris

རྒྱལ་ཆེན་བཞིའི་རིས།

caturmahārājakāyika

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the heavens of Buddhist cosmology, lowest among the six heavens of the desire realm (kāmadhātu, 'dod khams). Dwelling place of the Four Great Kings (caturmahārāja, rgyal chen bzhi), traditionally located on a terrace of Sumeru, just below the Heaven of the Thirty-Three. Each cardinal direction is ruled by one of the Four Great Kings and inhabited by a different class of nonhuman beings as their subjects: in the east, Dhṛtarāṣṭra rules the gandharvas; in the south, Virūḍhaka rules the kumbhāṇḍas; in the west, Virūpākṣa rules the nāgas; and in the north, Vaiśravaṇa rules the yakṣas.

g.217 confined chiliocosm

stong gi 'jig rten gyi khams byur bu

སྟོང་གི་འཛིག་རྟེན་གྱི་ཁམས་བྱུར་བ། sāhasralokadhātu

A universe comprising one thousand world systems each with its four continents etc., according to traditional Indian cosmology. The Tibetan term byur bu that forms part of the term used in this text, and also means “brimful,” may be a rendering of Skt. cūlakabaddha with the sense of this first-order world system being “bound,” i.e., relatively compact or limited when compared to the second- and third-order universes.

g.218 connecting propensities

bag chags kyi mtshams sbyor · bag chags dang mtshams sbyor

བག་ཆགས་ཀྱི་མཚམས་སྟོན། · བག་ཆགས་དང་མཚམས་སྟོན།

The mundane process of rebirth within cyclic existence, impelled by the propensities of past actions. See also The Precious Discourse on the Blessed One's Extensive Wisdom That Leads to Infinite Certainty (Toh 99), 3.162.

g.219 consciousness

rnam par shes pa

རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ།

vijñāna

Fifth of the five aggregates; also third of the twelve links of dependent origination. Consciousness is defined as “an awareness which is knowing and luminous.” Not being physical, it lacks resistance to obstruction. It has neither shape nor color, and it can be experienced but not externally perceived as an object. A distinction is made between the mundane consciousness of beings, and the wisdom of the buddhas. In the context of the present discourse, the former includes six aspects of consciousness, namely, visual consciousness, auditory consciousness, olfactory consciousness, tactile consciousness, and mental consciousness, the last of which objectively refers to mental phenomena.

g.220 consecrated

rab tu gnas pa

རབ་ཏུ་གནས་པ།

supraṭiṣṭhita

The 59th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.221 consecrated as a king of meditative stabilities

See “inspired eloquence.”

g.223 consummate reality

yongs su sgrub pa

ཡོངས་སུ་སྦྱབ་པ། pariniṣpatti

g.224 contaminant

zag pa

ཟག་པ། āsrava

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Literally, “to flow” or “to ooze.” Mental defilements or contaminations that “flow out” toward the objects of cyclic existence, binding us to them.

Vasubandhu offers two alternative explanations of this term: “They cause beings to remain (āsayanti) within saṃsāra” and “They flow from the Summit of Existence down to the Avīci hell, out of the six wounds that are the sense fields” (Abhidharmakośabhāṣya 5.40; Pradhan 1967, p. 308). The Summit of Existence (bhavāgra, srid pa'i rtse mo) is the highest point within saṃsāra, while the hell called Avīci (mnar med) is the lowest; the six sense fields (āyatana, skye mched) here refer to the five sense faculties plus the mind, i.e., the six internal sense fields.

g.225 contaminated phenomena

zag pa dang bcas pa'i chos

ཟག་པ་དང་བཅས་པའི་ཚོས།

sāsravadharma

Contaminated phenomena include the following: the five aggregates encompassed in the three realms, the twelve sense fields, the eighteen sensory elements, the four meditative concentrations, the four immeasurable attitudes, and the four formless meditative absorptions.

First of the eighty minor marks.

g.242 coral flower
me tog man dA ra ba མེ་ཏོག་མན་རྒྱ་ར་བ། mandārapuṣpa

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the five trees of Indra’s paradise, its heavenly flowers often rain down in salutation of the buddhas and bodhisattvas and are said to be very bright and aromatic, gladdening the hearts of those who see them. In our world, it is a tree native to India, Erythrina indica or Erythrina variegata, commonly known as the Indian coral tree, mandarava tree, flame tree, and tiger’s claw. In the early spring, before its leaves grow, the tree is fully covered in large flowers, which are rich in nectar and attract many birds. Although the most widespread coral tree has red crimson flowers, the color of the blossoms is not usually mentioned in the sūtras themselves, and it may refer to some other kinds, like the rarer Erythrina indica alba, which boasts white flowers.

g.243 coral tree flower
man dA ra ba མན་རྒྱ་ར་བ། mandārava

world, it is a tree native to India, Erythrina indica or Erythrina variegata, commonly known as the Indian coral tree, mandarava tree, flame tree, and tiger's claw. In the early spring, before its leaves grow, the tree is fully covered in large flowers, which are rich in nectar and attract many birds. Although the most widespread coral tree has red crimson flowers, the color of the blossoms is not usually mentioned in the sūtras themselves, and it may refer to some other kinds, like the rarer Erythrina indica alba, which boasts white flowers.

- g.283 delusion

gti mug

གཏི་མུག

moha

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the three poisons (dug gsum) along with aversion, or hatred, and attachment, or desire, which perpetuate the sufferings of cyclic existence. It is the obfuscating mental state which obstructs an individual from generating knowledge or insight, and it is said to be the dominant characteristic of the animal world in general. Commonly rendered as confusion, delusion, and ignorance, or bewilderment.

g.284 dependent origination

rten cing 'brel par 'byung ba

རྟེན་ཅིང་འབྲེལ་པར་འབྱུང་བ།

pratītyasamutpāda

The principle of dependent origination asserts that nothing exists independently of other factors, the reason for this being that things and events come into existence only by dependence on the aggregation of causes and conditions. In general, the processes of cyclic existence, through which the external world and the beings within it revolve in a continuous cycle of suffering, propelled by the propensities of past actions and their interaction with afflicted mental states, originate dependent on the sequential unfolding of twelve links, commencing from ignorance and ending with birth, aging and death. It is only through deliberate reversal of these twelve links that one can succeed in bringing the whole cycle to an end. The twelve links are enumerated many times in the text, starting at 2.-105. See also “twelve links of dependent origination.”

g.285 designation for something

chos su btags pa

སྒྲ་དབྱངས་ཀྱི་ཡི་གེ་དང་བྲལ་བ། nirakṣaramukti

The 94th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.292 dhāraṇī

gzungs

གཟུངས།

dhāraṇī

The term, derived from the Sanskrit root  $\sqrt{dhr}$  (“hold” or “retain”), refers to bodhisattvas’ enhanced powers of memory, which allow them to retain extensive teachings, as well as to their special ability to access teachings that have been encapsulated or encoded in short sequences of words or syllables; it can also denote those sequences of words or syllables themselves.

g.293 dhāraṇī gateways

gzungs kyi sgo

གཟུངས་ཀྱི་སྒོ།

dhāraṇīmukha

As a magical formula, a dhāraṇī constitutes a gateway to the infinite qualities of awakening, the awakened state itself, and the various forms of buddha activity. See also “dhāraṇī.”

པད་མོ་རྣམ་པར་བཀོད་པའི་གཟུངས། padmavyūhādhāraṇī <sup>AO</sup>

g.298 Dharma

chos

ཚོས།

dharma

The term dharma (chos) conveys ten different meanings, according to Vasubandhu's Vyākhyāyukti. In the context of the present work, it may mean "sacred doctrine" (also rendered "Dharma" in this translation), the "attributes" which buddhas and bodhisattvas acquire, "phenomena" or "things" in general, and, more specifically, "mental phenomena" which are the object of the mental faculty (manas, yid).

g.299 Dharma and Vinaya

chos dang 'dul ba

ཚོས་དང་འདུལ་བ།

dharmavinaya

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

An early term used to denote the Buddha's teaching. "Dharma" refers to the sūtras and "Vinaya" to the rules of discipline.

aveṇikabuddhadharma

See “eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.”

g.313 distinguishing mark

mtshan ma

མཚན་མ།

nimitta

A mark or feature of an object which serves as the basis for its being generically named and thus conceptually categorized. A distinguishing mark is usually imagined rather than being a real attribute of the object, and perception that operates by identifying distinguishing marks is therefore what defines coarse conceptuality. In some contexts (particularly with respect to meditative concentration practices), nimitta can be translated as “mental image.” Also translated in this text as “sign.”

g.314 distinguishing the terms associated with all phenomena

chos thams cad kyi tshig rab tu 'byed pa

aṣṭavimokṣa

The eight aspects of liberation ensue (1) when corporeal beings observe physical forms [in order to compose the mind]; (2) when formless beings endowed with internal perception observe external physical forms; (3) when beings are inclined toward pleasant states; (4) and when one achieves and dwells in the sphere of infinite space, thinking, 'Space is infinite.' (5) The fifth ensues when one achieves and dwells in the sphere of infinite consciousness, thinking, 'Consciousness is infinite.' (6) The sixth is when one achieves and dwells in the sphere of nothing-at-all, thinking, 'There is nothing at all.' (7) The seventh is when one achieves and dwells in the sphere of neither perception nor nonperception. (8) The eighth is when one achieves and dwells in the cessation of all perceptions and feelings. See 8.36 and 9.35.

g.330 eight further attributes to be avoided

g.339 eighth-lowest level

brgyad pa'i sa · brgyad pa

བརྒྱད་པའི་ས། · བརྒྱད་པ།

aṣṭamakabhūmi · aṣṭamaka

Name of the third of ten levels, denoting a person who is eight steps away from becoming an arhat, being on the cusp of becoming a stream-enterer. This is also the first and lowest stage in a list of eight stages or classes of a noble person (Skt. āryapudgala). The person at this stage is on the path of insight, and the name of this level may also be related to the “eightfold receptiveness to the path of insight” (darśanamārgāṣṭakṣānti, mthong lam gyi bzod pa brgyad) which comprises “knowledge of phenomena” (dharmajñāna, chos shes pa) and “subsequent knowledge” (anvayajñāna, rjes su rtogs pa'i shes pa) with respect to each of the four noble truths. The ten levels referred to here—not to be confused with the ten levels of the bodhisattva’s path—mark the progress of one who sequentially follows the paths of a śrāvaka, pratyekabuddha, and then bodhisattva on their way to completely awakened buddhahood.

Third of the four immeasurable attitudes.

g.351 emptiness

stong pa nyid

སྟོང་པ་ཉིད།

śūnyatā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Emptiness denotes the ultimate nature of reality, the total absence of inherent existence and self-identity with respect to all phenomena.

According to this view, all things and events are devoid of any independent, intrinsic reality that constitutes their essence. Nothing can be said to exist independent of the complex network of factors that gives rise to its origination, nor are phenomena independent of the cognitive processes and mental constructs that make up the conventional framework within which their identity and existence are posited. When all levels of conceptualization dissolve and when all forms of dichotomizing tendencies are quelled through deliberate meditative deconstruction of conceptual elaborations, the ultimate nature of reality will finally become manifest. It is the first of the three gateways to liberation.

g.352 emptiness as a gateway to liberation

rnam par thar pa'i sgo stong pa nyid

རྣམ་པར་ཐར་པའི་སྟོང་པ་ཉིད།

g.387 eon

bskal pa

བསྐལ་པ།

kalpa

According to the traditional Abhidharma understanding of cyclical time, a great eon (mahākalpa) is divided into eighty lesser or intervening eons. In the course of one great eon, the external universe and its sentient life take form and later disappear. During the first twenty of the lesser eons, the universe is in the process of creation and expansion (vivartakalpa); during the next twenty it remains created; during the third twenty, it is in the process of destruction or contraction (samvartakalpa); and during the last quarter of the cycle, it remains in a state of destruction.

g.388 equal to the unequalled

mi mnyam pa dang mnyam pa

 The 69th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.
- g.392 essential nature
ngo bo nyid
 རོ་བོ་ཉིད།
svabhāva
Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:
 This term denotes the ontological status of phenomena, according to which they are said to possess existence in their own right—inherently, in and of themselves, objectively, and independent of any other phenomena such as our conception and labelling. The absence of such an ontological reality is defined as the true nature of reality, emptiness.
- g.393 established instructions
gtan la phab pa bstan pa གཏན་ལ་ཕབ་པ་བསྟན་པ། upadeśa
 Eleventh of the twelve branches of the scriptures.

rab tu dga' zhing spro ba myong bar bya ba

རབ་དུ་དགའ་ཞིང་སྤྲོ་བ་ལྗོང་བར་བྱ་བ།

pramodyapratyanubhavatā

Fourth of the eight attributes of the second level.

g.406 extraneous entity

gzhan gyi dngos po

གཞན་གྱི་དངོས་པོ།

parabhāva

This term denotes “anything other than the unconditioned realm of phenomena” and so forth. Konow (1941), pp. 36–37, translates this term as “being-something-else.” Lamotte (op. cit. p. 1673) suggests “other existence.”

g.407 extrasensory power

mngon par shes pa

མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ།

abhijñā

The six extrasensory powers (miraculous ability, clairaudience, knowing beings’ minds, recollecting past lives, clairvoyance, and knowing the contaminants have ceased) are described fully in 2.234-2.239 and mentioned in a different order at 62.60. The five extrasensory powers are the first five of these, the sixth being the only one attainable only by Buddhist practitioners.

g.408 extrasensory power through which divine clairaudience is realized

lha’i rna ba’i khams mngon du bya ba’i mngon par shes pa

ལྷ་འི་རྣམ་པའི་ཁམས་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ། divyaśrotrajñānasākṣātkriyā[jñāna-labhi]ñā

Second of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.235.

g.409 extrasensory power through which divine clairvoyance is realized

lha’i mig mngon du bya ba’i mngon par shes pa

ལྷ་འི་མིག་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ། divyacakṣur abhi]ñāsākṣātkriyā[jñāna-labhi]ñā

Fifth of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.238.

g.410 extrasensory power through which the cessation of contaminants is realized

zag pa zad pa mngon du bya ba’i mngon par shes pa

ཟག་པ་ཟད་པ་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ། āsravakṣayābhi]ñāsākṣātkriyā[jñāna-labhi]ñā

Sixth of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.239.

- g.411 extrasensory power through which the facets of miraculous ability are realized

rdzu 'phrul gyi rnam pa mngon du bya ba'i mngon par shes pa

རྩུ་འཕྲུལ་གྱི་རྣམ་པ་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ།

ṛddhividhijñāsākṣātkriyā[jñāna-]abhijñā

First of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.234

- g.412 extrasensory power through which the minds and conduct of all beings are realized

sems can thams cad kyi sems dang spyod pa mngon du bya ba'i mngon par shes pa

སེམས་ཅན་ཐམས་ཅད་གྱི་སེམས་དང་སྤྱོད་པ་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ། sarvasattvacittacaritajñānasākṣātkriyā[jñāna-]abhijñā

Third of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.236.

- g.413 extrasensory power through which the recollection of past lives is realized

sngon gyi gnas rjes su dran pa mngon du bya ba'i mngon par shes pa

སྔོན་གྱི་གནས་རྗེས་སུ་དྲན་པ་མངོན་དུ་བྱ་བའི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ། pūrvanivāsānusmṛtisākṣātkriyā[jñāna-]abhijñā

Fourth of the six extrasensory powers. See 2.237.

- g.414 extremely broad collarbones

phrag so shin tu rgyas pa

ཕྲག་སོ་ཤིན་ཏུ་རྒྱས་པ།

citāntarāṃsatā

Twentieth of the thirty-two major marks.

- g.415 extremely even teeth

tshems shin tu mnyam pa

ཚེས་ཤིན་ཏུ་མཉམ་པ།

samadantatā

Twenty-eighth of the thirty-two major marks.

- g.416 extremely long [and slender] tongue

ljags shin du yangs pa

dharmacakṣus

Fourth of the five eyes. See 2.224-2.230.

g.423 eye of wisdom

shes rab kyi mig

ཤེས་རབ་ཀྱི་མིག

prajñācakṣuḥ

Third of the five eyes. See 2.222.

g.424 eyebrows with hairs of even length

smin ma'i spu mnyam pa dang ldan pa

སློན་མའི་སླུ་མཉམ་པ་དང་ལྡན་པ། samaromabhrū

Sixty-sixth of the eighty minor marks.

g.425 eyelashes like those of a cow

ba'i rdzi ma lta bu

བའི་རྩི་མ་ལྟ་བུ།

viśālagopakṣmanetratā

Thirty-second of the thirty-two major marks.

g.426 eyelashes that are dense

rdzi ma stug pa

རྩི་མ་སྒྲག་པ།

citrapakṣmā

Sixty-second of the eighty minor marks.

g.427 eyes like lotus petals, in which the light and dark parts are distinct

spyan dkar nag 'byes shing pad mo'i 'dab ma ltar 'dug pa

སྒྱུན་དཀར་ནག་འབྲེས་ཤིང་པད་མོའི་འདབ་མ་ལྟར་འདུག་པ། sitāsitaśakalanayana

Sixty-third of the eighty minor marks.

g.428 eyes that are long

spyan ring ba dang ldan pa

སྒྱུན་རིང་བ་དང་ལྡན་པ། viśālanetra

Sixtieth of the eighty minor marks.

g.429 eyes that are pure

spyān rnam par dag pa

སྤྱན་རྣམ་པར་དག་པ།

viśuddhanetra

Sixty-first of the eighty minor marks.

g.430 face is adorned with a hair ringlet [between the eyebrows]

zhal mdzod spus brgyan pa

ཞལ་མཛོད་སྤྱུས་བརྒྱན་པ།

ūrṇāṅkhitamukhatā

Seventeenth of the thirty-two major marks.

g.431 face that appears like a form being reflected zhal gzugs kyi gzugs brnyan snang ba

ཞལ་གཟུགས་ཀྱི་གཟུགས་བརྟན་སྒྲུང་བ། bimbapratibimbadarśanavadana

Forty-seventh of the eighty minor marks.

g.432 face that is not too long

zhal ha cang yang mi ring ba

ཞལ་ཉ་ཅང་ཡང་མི་རིང་བ། nātyāyatavacana

Forty-sixth of the eighty minor marks.

g.433 factors conducive to enlightenment byang chub kyi phyogs kyi chos

བྱང་ལྡན་གྱི་ཕྱོགས་ཀྱི་ཚོས། bodhipakṣadharmā

See “thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment.”

g.434 factors that take on negative states

gnas ngan len

གནས་ངན་ལེན།

dauṣṭhulya · dauṣṭīlya

A term that includes all the many factors, whether associated with body, speech, or mind, that underlie present or future suffering, including karma and the afflictions, the various kinds of obscuration, and the aggregates themselves. Lists of varying numbers of factors can be found (e.g. of 24 in the Abhidharmakośabhāṣya), but in this text the scope of the term is set out at 66.32-66.38.

g.435 faculties

dbang po

དབང་པོ།

indriya

See “five faculties.”

g.436 faculties endowed with the knowledge of all phenomena

kun shes pa rig pa'i dbang po

ཀུན་ཤེས་པ་རིག་པའི་དབང་པོ། ājñātāvīndriya

Third of the three faculties. See n.113.

g.437 faculties that acquire the knowledge of all phenomena

kun shes pa'i dbang po

ཀུན་ཤེས་པའི་དབང་པོ། ājñendriya

Second of the three faculties.

g.438 faculties that will enable knowledge of all that is unknown

ma shes pa yongs su shes par bya ba'i dbang po

· yongs su ma shes pa yongs su shes par bya ba'i dbang po

མ་ཤེས་པ་ཡོངས་སུ་ཤེས་པར་བྱ་བའི་དབང་པོ། . ཡོངས་སུ་མ་ཤེས་པ་ཡོངས་སུ་ཤེས་པར་བྱ་བའི་དབང་པོ། anājñātamājñāsyāmīndriya

First of the three faculties.

g.439 faculty of faith

dad pa'i dbang po

དད་པའི་དབང་པོ།

śraddhendriya

First of the five faculties.

g.440 faculty of meditative stability

ting nge 'dzin gyi dbang po

ཉིང་ངེ་འཛིན་གྱི་དབང་པོ།

samādhyindriya

Fourth of the five faculties.

g.441 faculty of perseverance

brtson 'grus kyi dbang po

བརྩོན་འགྲུས་ཀྱི་དབང་པོ། vīryendriya

Second of the five faculties.

g.442 faculty of recollection

dran pa'i dbang po

དྲན་པའི་དབང་པོ།

smṛtyindriya

Third of the five faculties.

g.443 faculty of wisdom

shes rab kyi dbang po

ཤེས་རབ་ཀྱི་དབང་པོ། prajñendriya

Fifth of the five faculties.

g.444 false views about perishable composites

'jig tshogs la lta ba

འཛིན་ཚོགས་ལ་ལྟ་བུ།

satkāyadr̥ṣṭi

First of the three fetters; also third of the five fetters associated with the lower realms, which concerns the superimposition of the notion of self upon the five aggregates.

g.445 falsehood

brdzun du smra ba · rdzun du smra ba

བརྩམ་བྱ་སྣ་བ། · རྩམ་བྱ་སྣ་བ། mṛṣāvāda

Fourth of the ten nonvirtuous actions. Also rendered here as “lying” and “telling of lies.”

g.446 fearlessnesses

mi 'jigs pa

མི་འཇིགས་པ།

vaiśāradya

See “four fearlessnesses.”

g.447 feelings

tshor ba

ཚོར་བ།

vedanā

Second of the five aggregates; also seventh of the twelve links of dependent origination. Also translated here as “sensation.”

g.448 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the body, touch, and tactile consciousness

lus dang reg bya dang lus kyi rnam par shes pa 'dus reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

ལུས་དང་རེག་བྱ་དང་ལུས་ཀྱི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། kāyaspraṣṭavyakāyavijñāna-saṃsparśajāvedanā

g.449 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the ears, sounds, and auditory consciousness

rna ba dang sgra dang rna'i rnam par shes pa 'dus reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

རྣ་བ་དང་སྒྲ་དང་རྣའི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། śrotraśabdaśrotravijñānasamsparsajāvedanā

g.450 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the eyes, sights, and visual consciousness

mig dang gzugs dang mig gi rnam par shes pa 'dus reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

མིག་དང་གཟུགས་དང་མིག་གི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། cakṣurūpacakṣurvijñāna-saṃsparśajāvedanā

g.451 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the mental faculty, mental phenomena, and mental consciousness yid dang chos dang yid kyi rnam par shes pa 'dus reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

ཡིད་དང་ཚོས་དང་ཡིད་ཀྱི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། manodharmamanovijñānasamsparsājāvedanā

g.452 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the nose, odors, and olfactory consciousness sna dang dri dang sna'i rnam par shes pa 'dus reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

སྒྲ་དང་དྲི་དང་སྒྲཱི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་ལྟེ་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། ghrāṇagandhaghrāṇāvijñāna-samsparsājāvedanā

g.453 feelings conditioned by sensory contact compounded by the tongue, tastes, and gustatory consciousness lce dang ro dang lce'i rnam par shes pa 'dus te reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

ལྗེ་དང་རོ་དང་ལྗེའི་རྣམ་པར་ཤེས་པ་འདུས་ཏེ་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། jihvārasajihvāvijñāna-samsparsājāvedanā

g.454 feelings conditioned by sensory contact that is mentally compounded yid kyi 'dus te reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

ཡིད་གྱི་འདུས་ཏེ་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། manahsamsparsājāvedanā

g.455 feelings conditioned by sensory contact that is visually compounded

mig gi 'dus te reg pa'i rkyen gyis tshor ba

མིག་གི་འདུས་ཏེ་རེག་པའི་རྐྱེན་གྱིས་ཚོར་བ། cakṣuḥsamsparsājāvedanā

g.456 feet are well positioned zhabs shin tu gnas pa

ཞབས་ཤིན་ཏུ་གནས་པ།

supraṭiṣṭhitapādātā

Second of the thirty-two major marks.

g.457 fetter

kun tu sbyor ba

ཀུན་ཏུ་སྦྱོར་བ།

saṃyojana

Factors that bind one to rebirth in saṃsāra. See also “three fetters” and “five fetters” associated with the lower realms.

g.458 final nirvāṇa

yongs su mya ngan las 'das pa

ཡོངས་སྐྱུ་རྒྱ་དན་ལས་འདས་པ། parinirvāṇa

Nirvāṇa, the state beyond sorrow, denotes the ultimate attainment of buddhahood, the permanent cessation of all suffering and the afflicted mental states that cause and perpetuate suffering, along with all misapprehension with regard to the nature of emptiness. As such, it is the antithesis of cyclic existence. Three types of nirvāṇa are identified: (1) the residual nirvāṇa where the person is still dependent on conditioned aggregates, (2) the nonresidual nirvāṇa where the aggregates have also been consumed within emptiness, and (3) the nonabiding nirvāṇa transcending the extremes of phenomenal existence and quiescence. Final nirvāṇa implies the nonresidual attainment.

g.459 first setting of their mind on enlightenment

sems dang po bskyed pa

སེམས་དང་པོ་བསྐྱེད་པ། prathamacittotpāda

g.460 five acquisitive aggregates

nye bar len pa'i phung po lnga

ཉེབར་ལེན་པའི་ཕུང་པོ་ལྔ། pañcopadānaskandha

A collective name for the five impure aggregates: (1) physical forms, (2) feelings, (3) perceptions, (4) formative predispositions, and (5) consciousness. These “acquisitive” aggregates (upadānaskandha, nye bar len pa'i phung po) denote the contaminated aggregates (sāsravaskandha, zag bcas kyi phung po) which emerge through the primary cause of past actions and afflicted mental states, and become the primary cause for subsequent actions and afflictions.

g.461 five aggregates

phung po lnga

ཕུང་པོ་ལྔ།

pañcaskandha

The ordinary mind-body complex is termed the “five aggregates,” which comprise physical forms, feelings, perceptions, formative predispositions, and consciousness. For a detailed exposition of the five aggregates in accord with Asaṅga’s Abhidharmasamuccaya, see Jamgon Kongtrul, TOK Book 6, Pt. 2: pp. 477–531.

g.462 five classes of living beings

'gro ba lnga

འགོ་བ་ལྔ།

pañcagati

These comprise gods and humans of the higher realms within cyclic existence, along with animals, anguished spirits, and the denizens of the hells, whose abodes are identified with the lower realms.

g.463 five degrees of enlightenment

byang chub nam lnga

བྱང་ལྡན་རྣམ་ལྔ།

pañcabodhi

See n.334.

g.464 five extrasensory powers

mngon par shes pa lnga

མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ་ལྔ། pañcābhijñā

See “extrasensory power.”

g.465 five eyes

mig lnga

མིག་ལྔ།

pañcacakṣuḥ

These comprise (1) the eye of flesh, (2) the eye of divine clairvoyance, (3) the eye of wisdom, (4) the eye of the Dharma, and (5) the eye of the buddhas. See 2.216-2.233.

g.466 five eyes of the tathāgatas

de bzhin gshegs pa'i spyan lnga

དེ་བཞིན་གཤེགས་པའི་སྤྱན་ལྔ། pañcacakṣus

g.467 five faculties

dbang po lnga

དབང་པོ་ལྔ།

pañcendriya

The five faculties, as found listed in 9.22, comprise (1) the faculty of faith, (2) the faculty of perseverance, (3) the faculty of recollection, (4) the faculty of meditative stability, and (5) the faculty of wisdom.

g.468 five fetters associated with the higher realms

bla ma'i cha can gyi kun tu sbyor ba lnga

སྒྲ་མའི་ཆཅན་གྱི་ཀུན་དུ་སྦྱོར་བ་ལྔ།

pañcordhvaḥbhāgīyasamyojana

As described in 2.225, they comprise attachment to the realm of form, attachment to the realm of formlessness, ignorance, pride, and mental agitation.

g.469 five fetters associated with the lower realms

'og ma'i cha dang 'thun pa'i kun tu sbyor ba lnga

· dam pa ma yin pa'i cha'i kun du sbyor ba lnga

འོག་མའི་ཆད་དང་འཇུག་པའི་ཀུན་དུ་སྦྱོར་བ་ལྔ། · དམ་པ་མ་ཡིན་པའི་ཆའི་ཀུན་དུ་སྦྱོར་བ་ལྔ།

adharabhāgīyapañcasamyojana

The five fetters associated with the lower realms comprise desire, hatred, inertia due to wrong views, attachment to moral and ascetic supremacy, and doubt. See Zhang Yisun et al (1985): p. 2529.

g.470 five inexpressible crimes

mtshams med lnga · mtshams ma mchis pa lnga

མཚམས་མེད་ལྔ། · མཚམས་མ་མཆིས་པ་ལྔ། pañcānantarīya

The “five inexpressible crimes,” or “crimes with immediate retribution” because they result in immediate rebirth in the hells without any intermediate state, are regarded as the most severe and consequently the most difficult negative actions to overcome by reparation. They are matricide (ma gsod pa), killing an arhat (dgra bcom pa gsod pa), patricide (pha gsod pa), creating a schism in the monastic community (dge 'dun gyi dbyen byas pa), and intentionally wounding a buddha (de bzhin gshegs pa'i sku la ngan sems kyis khrag 'byin pa).

g.471 five obscurations

sgrib pa lnga

སྒྲིབ་པ་ལྔ།

pañcanivarāṇa

The five obscurations comprise: longing for sensual pleasure (kāmacchanda, 'dod la 'dun pa), harmful intention (vyāpāda, gnod sems), dullness and sleep (styānamiddha, rmugs gnyid), agitation and regret (auddhatyakauṛtya, rgod 'gyod), and doubt (vicikitsā, the tshom). They are listed at 39.18. See also Kimura IV: p. 182.

g.472 five powers

stobs lnga

སྒྲོབ་ས་ལྔ།

pañcabala

As listed in 9.23, these comprise (1) the power of faith, (2) the power of perseverance, (3) the power of recollection, (4) the power of meditative stability, and (5) the power of wisdom.

g.473 five precepts

bslab pa'i gnas lnga

བསྐྱབ་པ་འི་གནས་ལྔ།

pañcaśikṣā

To abstain from killing, theft, sexual misconduct, lying, and intoxicants.

g.474 five undefiled aggregates

zag med kyi phung po lnga

ཟག་མེད་གྱི་ཕུང་པོ་ལྔ།

pañca anāsravaskandha

Also known as the five aggregates beyond the world (lokottaraskandha, 'jig rten las 'das pa'i phung po lnga). They consist of the aggregate of ethical discipline, the aggregate of meditative stability, the aggregate of wisdom, the aggregate of liberation, and the aggregate of the knowledge and seeing of liberation.

g.475 five undiminished extrasensory powers

ma nyams pa'i mngon par shes pa lnga

མ་ཉམས་པ་འི་མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ་ལྔ།

The five extrasensory powers are called “undiminished” in the sense of remaining present through death and all subsequent rebirths, whatever the form of life. See also The Long Explanation (Toh 3808), 4.57.

g.476 focus their attention with all-aspect omniscience in mind

rnam pa thams cad mkhyen pa nyid dang ldan pa'i yid la bya bas

རྣམ་པ་ཐམས་ཅད་མཁྱེན་པ་ཉིད་དང་ལྷན་པའི་ཡིད་ལ་བྱ་བས།

sarvākārajñatāpratisaṃyuktair manasikārair

An important phrase in this text specifying that the goal of a bodhisattva’s practice remains the attainment of all-aspect omniscience, i.e., buddhahood.

g.477 focusing the attention correctly

tshul bzhin yid la byed pa

ཚུལ་བཞིན་ཡིད་ལ་བྱེད་པ།

yoniso manaskāra

An important term describing how the mind engages with a subject.

“Correctly” (yoniso, tshul bzhin) in many contexts means without the distortions brought by views such as of the self, permanence, etc., but more particularly in the Prajñāpāramitā texts, as explained in chapter 23 at 23.28, it also means without engaging in either duality or nonduality.

g.478 follower of the Dharma

chos kyi rjes su 'brang ba

ཚོས་ཀྱི་རྗེས་སུ་འབྲང་བ།

dharmānusārin

g.479 follower on account of faith

dad pa'i rjes su 'brang ba

དད་པའི་རྗེས་སུ་འབྲང་བ། śraddhānusārin

g.480 follower on account of the doctrine

chos kyi rjes su 'brang ba

ཚོས་ཀྱི་རྗེས་སུ་འབྲང་བ།

dharmānusārin

g.481 following those learned in the languages of all beings

sems can thams cad kyi sgra la mkhas pa'i rjes su 'gro ba

སེམས་ཅན་ཐམས་ཅད་ཀྱི་སྐྱེ་ལ་མཁས་པའི་རྗེས་སུ་འགྲོ་བ།

sarvoasattvarutakauśalyānugato

The sixteenth of the fifty-one meditative stabilities manifested to Sadāprarudita in chapter 73.

g.482 forehead that is broad

zhal dpral ba yangs pa dang ldan pa

ཞལ་དྲམ་ལ་བ་ཡངས་པ་དང་ལྡན་པ།

pr̥thulalāṭa

Seventy-second of the eighty minor marks.

g.483 forehead that is well formed

zhal dpral ba legs par grub pa dang ldan pa

ཞལ་དྲམ་ལ་བ་ལེགས་པར་གྲུབ་པ་དང་ལྡན་པ། supariṇatalalāṭa

Seventy-first of the eighty minor marks.

g.484 formative predispositions

'du byed

འདུ་བྱེད།

saṃskāra

Fourth of the five aggregates; also second of the twelve links of dependent origination. This term denotes the deep-seated predispositions inherited from past actions and experiences, some of which function in association with mind, while others do not. Formative predispositions are critical to the Buddhist understanding of the causal dynamics of karma and conditioning. It is the collection of such countless predispositions by afflicted mental states that constitutes the obscuration of misconceptions concerning the known range of phenomena, the total eradication of which occurs only when full awakening or buddhahood is achieved.

g.485 formless meditative absorptions

gzugs med pa'i snyoms par 'jug pa

གཟུགས་མེད་པའི་སྣོ་མས་པར་འཇུག་པ། ārūpyasamāpatti

Described in 9.34.

g.486 formulation

rnam grangs

རྣམ་གྲངས།

paryāya

Refers in this text to the statements underlying certain important points of the prajñāpāramitā. The term can also mean “arrangement,” “discourse,” or “explanation.”

g.487 formulation of the Dharma

chos kyi rnam grangs

ཚོས་ཀྱི་རྣམ་གྲངས།

dharmaparyāya

A particular way of expressing or formulating the Dharma, whether in the form of a long discourse or brief statement.

g.488 forward and reversed operation

lugs 'byung dang lugs ldog · lugs dang 'thun pa dang lugs dang mi 'thun pa

ལུགས་འབྱུང་དང་ལུགས་ལྡོག་པ་ · ལུགས་དང་འབྱུག་པ་དང་ལུགས་དང་མི་འབྱུག་པ། anulomapratiloma

The process of dependent origination as it works to bring about rebirth in saṃsāra, and as it works when deliberately reversed to bring the cycle to an end. See “twelve links of dependent origination.”

g.489 four applications of mindfulness

dran pa nye bar gzhag pa bzhi

དྲན་པ་ཉེ་བར་གཞག་པ་བཞི།

catuḥsmṛtyupasthāna

The four applications of mindfulness are (1) the application of mindfulness which observes the physical body; (2) the application of mindfulness which observes feelings; (3) the application of mindfulness which observes the mind; and (4) the application of mindfulness which observes phenomena. In the present sūtra, an explanation focused mainly on the first of the four is found at the beginning of chapter 9. See 9.1.

g.490 four assemblies

'khor bzhi

འཁོར་བཞི།

catuḥpariṣad

This denotes the assemblies of fully ordained monks and nuns, along with laymen and laywomen.

g.491 four attractive qualities

bsdu ba'i dngos po bzhi

བསྐྱུ་བའི་དངོས་པོ་བཞི།

catuḥsaṃgrahaḥastu

These are (1) generosity (sbyin pa, dāna), (2) pleasant speech (snyan par smra ba, priyavadita), (3) purposeful activity (don du spyod pa, arthacaryā), and (4) harmonious activity (don 'thun par spyod pa, samānārthatā). The last of these is interpreted in Asaṅga's works to mean "doing oneself what one preaches to others," but the original meaning in this context according to some sources including the Mahāvastu may have been consonance, or empathy, in the sense of sharing the joys and sorrows of others (see Edgerton p. 569).

g.492 four bonds

sbyor ba bzhi

སྐྱུར་བ་བཞི།

caturyoga

According to Nordrang Orgyan 2008: p. 808, there are eight distinct enumerations, among which they are identified in the commentarial tradition of the Abhidharmakośa with the four torrents.

g.493 four continents

gling bzhi

གླིང་བཞི།

caturdvīpa

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

According to traditional Buddhist cosmology, our universe consists of a central mountain, known as Mount Meru or Sumeru, surrounded by four island continents (dvīpa), one in each of the four cardinal directions. The Abhidharmakośa explains that each of these island continents has a specific shape and is flanked by two smaller subcontinents of similar shape. To the south of Mount Meru is Jambudvīpa, corresponding either to the Indian subcontinent itself or to the known world. It is triangular in shape, and at its center is the place where the buddhas attain awakening. The humans who inhabit Jambudvīpa have a lifespan of one hundred years. To the east is Videha, a semicircular continent inhabited by humans who have a lifespan of two hundred fifty years and are twice as tall as the humans who inhabit Jambudvīpa. To the north is Uttarakuru, a square continent whose inhabitants have a lifespan of a thousand years. To the west is Godānīya, circular in shape, where the lifespan is five hundred years.

g.494 four correct exertions

yang dag par spong ba bzhi

ཡང་དག་པར་སྤོང་བ་བཞི།

catuḥprahāṇa

See 9.20. The four correct exertions are (1) preventing negative states of mind from arising, (2) removing those that have already arisen, (3) giving rise to positive states that have not yet arisen, and (4) maintaining those that have already arisen. While the translation of this term here follows the Sanskrit, a literal translation from Tibetan would be “four correct abandonings,” a rendering often seen. It is possible that the Tibetan translators may originally have confused the meaning in Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit (BHS) of the term prahāṇa (“priority”) with its meaning in classical Sanskrit (“elimination”). The classical Sanskrit equivalent of BHS prahāṇa is pradhāna.

g.495 four determinations rnam par dgod pa bzhi

རྣམ་པར་དགོང་པ་བཞི།

caturvyavasthāna

These concern: (1) establishing the sacred doctrine (chos gdags pa rnam par 'god pa), (2) establishing the truth (bden pa gdags pa rnam par 'god pa), (3) establishing reason (rigs pa gdags pa rnam par 'god pa), and (4) establishing the vehicles (theg pa gdags pa rnam par 'god pa). See the Śatasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitā-bṛhaṭṭikā, Toh 3807 (Degé Tengyur vol. 91, F37.a); also Edgerton, p. 516.

g.496 four fearlessnesses

mi 'jigs pa bzhi

མི་འཇིགས་པ་བཞི།

caturvaiśāradya

The four fearlessnesses are proclaimed by the tathāgatas as: (1) “I claim to have attained completely awakened buddhahood”; (2) “I claim I am one whose contaminants have ceased”; (3) “I claim to have explained those phenomena that cause obstacles”; (4) “I claim to have shown the path that leads to realizing the emancipation of the noble and that will genuinely bring an end to suffering for those who make use of it.” The listing of the four fearlessnesses is translated and analyzed in Konow 1941: pp. 39–40, with reconstructed Sanskrit on pp. 106–7. A full explanation of the fearlessnesses can be found in the passage at 2.388–2.425 in The Teaching on the Great Compassion of the Tathāgata (Tathāgatamahākaruṇānirdeśa, Toh 147), in which the four fearlessnesses are described as the eleventh to fourteenth of thirty-two actions of a tathāgata. See also Mahāvvyutpatti 130–34 and the corresponding explanation in the Draḥor Bamponyipa (sgra sbyor bam po gnyis pa); Dayal 1932: pp. 20–21; and Sparham 2012 (IV): pp. 80–81. The four are generally known by other names, as in the Mahāvvyutpatti: the first is the “fearlessness in the knowledge of all phenomena” (sarvadharmābhisambodhi-vaiśāradya, chos thams cad mkhyen pa la mi 'jigs pa), which the Buddha achieves for his own benefit; the second is the “fearlessness in the knowledge of the cessation of all contaminants” (sarvāśravakṣayajñānavaiśāradya, zag pa zad pa thams cad mkhyen pa la mi 'jigs pa), which the Buddha achieves for his own benefit; the third is the “fearlessness to declare that phenomena that obstruct the path will not engender any further negative outcomes” (anantarāyika-dharmānanyathātoaviniścitaavyākaraṇavaiśāradya, bar du gcod pa'i chos rnams gzhan du mi 'gyur bar nges pa'i lung bstan pa la mi 'jigs pa), which the Buddha achieves for others' benefit; and the fourth is the “fearlessness that the path of renunciation through which all excellent attributes are to be obtained has been thus realized” (sarvasampadadhigamāyanairāṇīkapratipattathātoavaiśāradya, phun sum tshogs pa thams cad thob par 'gyur bar nges par 'byung ba'i lam de bzhin du gyur ba la mi 'jigs pa), which the Buddha achieves for others' benefit.

g.497 four formless meditative absorptions

gzugs med pa'i snyoms par 'jug pa bzhi

གཟུགས་མེད་པའི་སློམས་པར་འཇུག་པ་བཞི། caturārūpyasamāpatti

As found listed in 9.34 these comprise (1) the meditative absorption of the sphere of infinite space, (2) the meditative absorption of the sphere of infinite consciousness, (3) the meditative absorption of the sphere of nothing-at-all, and (4) the meditative absorption of neither perception nor nonperception. The four formless absorptions and their fruits are discussed in Jamgon Kongtrul, TOK Book 6, Pt. 2: pp. 436–38.

g.498 four graspings

nye bar len pa bzhi

ཉེ་བར་ལེན་པ་བཞི།

caturupādāna

These comprise (1) desire (rāga, 'dod pa), (2) views (dṛṣṭi, lta ba), (3) ethical discipline and asceticism (śīlavrata, tshul khrims brtul zhugs), and (4) self-promotion (ātmaavāda, bdag tu smra ba). See Zhang Yisun: p. 967.

g.499 Four Great Kings

rgyal po chen po bzhi

རྒྱལ་པོ་ཚེན་པོ་བཞི།

caturmahārāja

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Four gods who live on the lower slopes (fourth level) of Mount Meru in the eponymous Heaven of the Four Great Kings (Cāturmahārājika, rgyal chen bzhi'i ris) and guard the four cardinal directions. Each is the leader of a nonhuman class of beings living in his realm. They are Dhṛtarāṣṭra, ruling the gandharvas in the east; Virūḍhaka, ruling over the kumbhāṇḍas in the south; Virūpākṣa, ruling the nāgas in the west; and Vaiśravaṇa (also known as Kubera) ruling the yakṣas in the north. Also referred to as Guardians of the World or World-Protectors (lokapāla, 'jig rten skyong ba).

g.500 four immeasurable attitudes

tshad med pa bzhi

ཚད་མེད་པ་བཞི།

caturaprameya

These are (1) loving kindness, (2) compassion, (3) empathetic joy, and (4) equanimity. On training in the four immeasurable attitudes, see Padmakara Translation Group (1994): pp. 195–217.

g.501 four kinds of disease

nad bzhi

ནད་བཞི།

caturvyādhi

Diseases of wind, bile, phlegm, and a mixture of humoral imbalances.

g.502 four kinds of exact knowledge

so so yang dag par rig pa bzhi

སོ་སོ་ཡང་དག་པར་རིག་པ་བཞི།

caturpratisamvid

The four kinds of exact knowledge—the essentials through which the buddhas impart their teachings—comprise (1) exact knowledge of meanings, (2) exact knowledge of dharmas, (3) exact knowledge of their language and lexical explanations, and (4) exact knowledge of their eloquent expression. See 9.42. On the philological origins of these four kinds of exact knowledge, see Konow (1941): p. 40, and the reconstructed Sanskrit on p. 107; also Dayal (1932): pp. 259–67, and Sparham (2012 IV): pp. 78–79.

g.503 four knots

mdud pa bzhi

མདུད་པ་བཞི།

caturgranthā

These comprise: (1) covetousness (abhidhyā, brnab sems), (2) malice (vyāpāda, gnod sems), (3) moral supremacy (śīlaparāmarśa, tshul khrims snyems pa) and (4) ascetic supremacy (vrataparāmarśa, brtul zhugs snyems pa). See Zhang Yisun: p. 1379.

g.504 four meditative concentrations

bsam gtan bzhi

བསམ་གཏན་བཞི།

caturdhyāna

Described in 9.31-9.32. See also “meditative concentration.” The four meditative concentrations and their fruits are specifically examined in Jamgon Kongtrul, TOK Book 6, Pt. 2: pp. 427–36. For Pāli and Sanskrit sources, see Dayal (1932): pp. 225–31.

g.505 four misconceptions

phyin ci log bzhi

ཕྱིན་ཅི་ལོག་བཞི།

caturviparyāsā

These comprise (1) the notion that what is impermanent is permanent (anitye nityasaṃjñā, mi rtag pa la rtag pa'i 'du shes), (2) the notion that what is suffering is happiness (duḥkhe sukhasaṃjñā, sdug bsngal ba la bde ba'i 'du shes), (3) the notion that nonself is self (anātmanyātmasaṃjñā, bdag med pa la bdag gi 'du shes), and (4) the notion that what is unpleasant is pleasant (aśubhe śubhasaṃjñā, mi sdug pa la sdug pa'i 'du shes). The last is also sometimes (though not in this text) rendered “holding impurity to be purity” (aśucau śuci, mi gtsang pa la gtsang bar 'dzin pa). See Negi 1993–2005: p. 3569 and Zhang Yisun: p. 1748.

g.506 four nourishments

zas bzhi

ཟས་བཞི།

caturāhāra

These comprise: (1) the nourishment of food (kavaḍīkāra, kham), (2) the nourishment of sensory contact (sparśa, reg pa), (3) the nourishment of mentation (cetanā, sems pa), and (4) the nourishment of consciousness (vijñāna, rnam par shes pa), the first two of which are directed toward the present life and the last two to the subsequent life. See Negi 1993–2005: p. 5382 and Zhang Yisun et al: p. 2457.

g.507 four pairs of persons

skyes bu zung bzhi

སྐྱེས་བུ་རྩུང་བཞི།

catuḥ puruṣayuga

g.508 four supports for miraculous ability

rdzu 'phrul gyi rkang pa bzhi

རྩུ་འཕུལ་གྱི་རྐང་པ་བཞི།

catvāra ṛddhipādāḥ

The four supports for miraculous ability, as enumerated in 9.21, comprise (1) the support for miraculous ability combining the meditative stability of resolution with the formative force of exertion, (2) the support for miraculous ability combining the meditative stability of perseverance with the formative force of exertion, (3) the support for miraculous ability combining the meditative stability of mind with the formative force of exertion, and (4) the support for miraculous ability combining the meditative stability of scrutiny with the formative force of exertion.

g.509 four torrents

chu bo bzhi

ཚུ་བོ་བཞི།

caturogha

The four torrents, which are to be abandoned, comprise: (1) the torrent of ignorance (avidyā, ma rig pa), (2) the torrent of wrong view (dṛṣṭi, lta ba), (3) the torrent of rebirth (bhava, srid pa), and (4) the torrent of craving (tṛṣṇā, sred pa). See Nyima and Dorje 2001: p. 1075.

g.510 four truths of the noble ones

'phags pa'i bden pa bzhi

འཕགས་པའི་བདེན་པ་བཞི།

caturāryasatya

The four truths of the noble ones, as listed in 18.43, comprise (1) the truth of suffering, (2) the truth of the origin of suffering, (3) the truth of the cessation of suffering, and (4) the truth of the path. (Strictly speaking, these should be translated “the truth of the noble ones concerning suffering,” and so on, but for brevity the widespread short form has been used.)

The topic from the perspective of this text is discussed in detail in 68.13-68.19. On the twelve aspects pertaining to the four noble truths, see n.392.

g.511 four utter purities

shin tu yongs su dag pa bzhi

ཤིན་ཏུ་ཡོངས་སུ་དག་པ་བཞི།

catuḥpariśuddha

These are enumerated in 62.61.

g.512 fourteen aspects of emptiness

stong pa nyid bcu bzhi

སྟོང་པ་ཉིད་བརྒྱ་བཞི།

caturdaśaśūnyatā

These are enumerated in 52.47 and comprise the first fourteen of the eighteen aspects of emptiness, q.v. See also Lamotte: The Treatise on the Great Virtue of Wisdom, IV: p. 1670.

g.513 fragrant hair

dbu skra dri zhim pa

དབུ་སྐྱ་རི་ཞིམ་པ།

surabhikeśa

Seventy-ninth of the eighty minor marks.

g.514 free from extinction

zad pa dang bral ba

ཟད་པ་དང་བྲལ་བ།

kṣayāpagata

The 46th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.515 free from mentation

sems med pa

སེམས་མེད་པ།

niścitta

The 34th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.516 frequent charnel grounds

dur khrod pa

དུར་ཁྲོད་པ།

śmāśānika

One of the twelve ascetic practices (dhūtaguṇa).

g.517 fruit of being destined for only one more rebirth

lan gcig phyir 'ong ba'i 'bras bu

ལན་གཅིག་ཕྱིར་འོང་བའི་འབྲས་བུ།

sakṛdāgāmīphala

Second of the four fruits attainable by śrāvakas.

g.518 fruit of entering the stream

rgyun du zhugs pa'i 'bras bu

རྒྱུན་དུ་ཞུགས་པའི་འབྲས་བུ།

śrota'āpannaphala

First of the four fruits attainable by śrāvakas, that of the first stage in progressing toward nirvāṇa.

g.519 fruit of no longer being subject to rebirth

phyir mi 'ong ba'i 'bras bu

ཕྱིར་མི་འོང་བའི་འབྲས་བུ། āgāmīphala

Third of the four fruits attainable by śrāvakas.

g.520 full set of forty even teeth

tshems mnyam zhing bzhi bcu tshang ba

ཚེས་མཉམ་ཞིང་བཞི་བརྒྱ་ཚང་བ།

samacatvāriśaddantatā

Thirtieth of the thirty-two major marks.

g.521 gait of a leading bull

khyu mchog gi stabs su bzhud pa

ལྷ་མཚོག་གི་སྟབས་སུ་བཞུད་པ།

vṛṣabhavikrāntagāmin

Fourteenth of the eighty minor marks.

g.522 gait of a lion

seng ge'i 'gros su bzhud pa

སེང་གའི་འགྲོས་སུ་བཞུད་པ།

siṃhavikrāntagāmin

Eleventh of the eighty minor marks.

g.523 gait of a swan

ngang pa'i stabs su bzhud pa

ངང་པའི་སྟབས་སུ་བཞུད་པ།

haṃsavikrāntagāmin

Thirteenth of the eighty minor marks.

g.524 gait of an elephant

glang po'i 'gros su bzhud pa

གླང་པོའི་འགྲོས་སུ་བཞུད་པ། nāgavikrāntagāmin

Twelfth of the eighty minor marks.

g.525 gait turning to the right

g.yas phyogs su bzhud pa

གཡས་ཕྱོགས་སུ་བཞུད་པ།

pradakṣiṇāvartagāmin

Fifteenth of the eighty minor marks.

g.526 gandharva

dri za

དྷི་ཟ།

gandharva

Gandharvas are generally regarded as a class of semi-divine beings, but in Abhidharma the term is often used differently—as a synonym for the mental body assumed by any being of the realm of desire (kāmadhātu) during the intermediate state between death and rebirth.

g.527 gandharva spirit town

dri za'i grong khyer

དི་ཟའི་གྲོང་ཁྱེར།

gandharvanagara

See “gandharva.”

g.528 Gandhavati

spos can

སྤོས་ཅན།

gandhavati

The city where Dharmodgata resides and teaches.

g.529 Gaṅgā

gang gA'i klung

གང་གཱའི་ཀླུང།

gaṅgā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Gaṅgā, or Ganges in English, is considered to be the most sacred river of India, particularly within the Hindu tradition. It starts in the Himalayas, flows through the northern plains of India, bathing the holy city of Vārāṇasī, and meets the sea at the Bay of Bengal, in Bangladesh. In the sūtras, however, this river is mostly mentioned not for its sacredness but for its abundant sands—noticeable still today on its many sandy banks and at its delta—which serve as a common metaphor for infinitely large numbers.

According to Buddhist cosmology, as explained in the Abhidharmakośa, it is one of the four rivers that flow from Lake Anavatapta and cross the southern continent of Jambudvīpa—the known human world or more specifically the Indian subcontinent.

g.530 Gaṅgadevī

gang gA'i lha mo

གང་གཱའི་ལྷ་མོ།

gaṅgadevī

A woman whose future awakening is predicted by the Buddha in chapter 43.

g.531 garuḍa

nam mkha' lding

ནམ་མཁའ་ལྗེ་།

garuḍa

A mythical bird normally depicted with a sharp, owl-like beak, often holding a snake, and with large and powerful wings. In Buddhism, the symbolism of the garuḍa is generally associated with wisdom (it is said that the garuḍa can fly as soon as it is hatched) and with the consuming of afflicted mental states (the holding of a snake in its beak).

g.532 gateway entering into all phenomena

chos thams cad la 'jug pa'i sgo

ཚོས་ཐམས་ཅད་ལ་འཇུག་པའི་སྒོ། sarvadharmapraveśamukha

A meditative stability.

g.533 gateway to liberation

rnam par thar pa'i sgo

རྣམ་པར་ཐར་པའི་སྒོ།

vimokṣamukha

See “three gateways to liberation.”

g.534 gateways of meditative stability

ting nge 'dzin gyi sgo

ཏིང་ངེ་འཛིན་གྱི་སྒོ། samādhimukha

g.535 gateways to the letters

yi ge'i sgo

ཡི་གེའི་སྒོ།

akṣaramukha

One aspect of a set of forty-four syllables listed at 9.44 as dhāraṇī gateways.

See also “introduction to the letters.”

g.536 generosity

sbyin pa

སྤྱིན་པ།

dāna

First of the four attractive qualities of a bodhisattva. However, in the context of the perfections, generosity is the first of the six perfections.

g.537 genuine and definitive reality

yang dag pa ji lta ba nyid

ཡང་དག་པ་ཇི་ལྟ་བུ་ཉིད། yathābhūtata

g.538 genuine, definitive real nature

yang dag pa ji lta ba'i de bzhin nyid

ཡང་དག་པ་ཇི་ལྟ་བུ་བའི་དེ་བཞིན་ཉིད། yathābhūtatathatā

g.539 genuine reality

yang dag pa'i don

ཡང་དག་པའི་དོན། bhutārtha

g.540 girth like the banyan tree

shing n+ya gro da ltar chu zheng gab pa

ཤིང་ཅུ་གྲོ་དྭ་ལྷ་ར་རྒྱ་ཞེང་གཤམ་པ།

nyagrodhaparimaṇḍalatā

Twenty-second of the thirty-two major marks.

g.541 give rise to conceits

rlom sems su byed pa

རྫོམ་སེམས་སུ་བྱེད་པ།

manyate

Conceits in most instances here has the meaning both of unjustified assumptions and fanciful imagination as well as of pride.

g.542 gladdening of all beings

sems can thams cad mngon par dga' ba

སེམས་ཅན་གསལ་བའི་སྐྱོ་བར་དགའ་བ།

sarvasattvābhipramodano

The fifteenth of the fifty-one meditative stabilities manifested to Sadāprarudita in chapter 73.

g.543 glossy nails
sen mo'i mdog snum pa

སེན་མོ་འི་མདོག་སྒྲུབ་པ། snigdhanakha

Second of the eighty minor marks.

g.544 god

ལྷ། deva

One of the five or six classes of living beings, specifically engendered and dominated by exaltation, indulgence, and pride. Like human beings and asuras, they are all within the higher realms (svarga, mtho ris) of rebirth, but nonetheless remain trapped within cyclic existence. The gods are said to exist in realms higher than that of the human realm, their realms and abodes set out in their own hierarchy. The god realms altogether comprise (1) six god realms within the realm of desire (kāmadhātu), commencing with Caturmahārājakāyika and Trayastrimśa, and concluding with Yāma, Tuṣita, Nirmāṇarata, and Paranirmitavaśavartin; (2) twenty-one realms in the realm of form (rūpadhātu), including (a) the sixteen Brahmā realms, extending from Brahmakāyika through Brahmapurohita, Brahmapariṣadya, Mahābrahmā, Ābha, Parīttābha, Apramāṇābha, Ābhāsvara, Śubha, Parīttaśubha, Apramāṇaśubha, Śubhakṛtsna, Bṛhat, Parīttabṛhat, and Apramāṇabṛhat to Bṛhatphala, which are attained corresponding to lesser, middling, and higher degrees of the four meditative concentrations; (b) the five Pure Abodes at the pinnacle of the realm of form, extending from Avṛha, through Atapa, Sudṛśa, and Sudarśana to Akaniṣṭha; and (3) the four formless realms at the summit of existence. See 2.66 and similar passages. Note that the list in this text differs from those in other texts in including four realms (instead of three) for each of the four groups of Brahmā realms, i.e., in listing sixteen Brahmā realms instead of twelve, and therefore twenty-one realms of form in all.

g.545 golden complexion

gser gyi kha dog

གསེར་གྱི་ཁ་དོག་

suvarṇavarṇatā

Fourteenth of the thirty-two major marks.

g.546 Grahadatta

gzas byin

གཟས་བྱིན།

grahadatta

Name of a bodhisattva.

g.547 grasping

len pa

ལེན་པ།

upādāna

Ninth of the twelve links of dependent origination.

g.548 gratitude and thankfulness

byas pa shes shing drin du gzo ba

བྱས་པ་ཤེས་ཤིང་རྒྱན་དུ་གཞོ་བ།

kṛtajñatā kṛtakāritā

Second of the eight attributes of the second level.

g.549 great and lofty

che zhing mtho ba

ཆེ་ཞིང་མཐོ་བ།

mahāsāla

The same Sanskrit term is rendered in the Tibetan of other sūtras as a simile (“like a great sal tree”) in similar passages, but the Tibetan in this text uses an interpretative adjectival phrase.

g.550 great and lofty householder family

khyim bdag che zhing mtho ba'i rigs

ཁྱིམ་བདག་ཆེ་ཞིང་མཐོ་བའི་རིགས།

gṛhapatimahāsālakula

Note that the metaphor within the Sanskrit term (“a great sal tree”) is here interpreted in the Tibetan term. In equivalent passages in other versions of the sūtra, the metaphorical part of the term is rendered literally in the Tibetan. See also n.124.

g.551 great and lofty priestly family

bram ze che zhing mtho ba'i rigs

བླ་མ་ཟླ་ཆེ་ཞིང་མཐོ་བའི་རིགས།

brāhmanamahāśālakula

Note that the metaphor within the Sanskrit term (“a great sal tree”) is here interpreted in the Tibetan term. In equivalent passages in other versions of the sūtra, the metaphorical part of the term is rendered literally in the Tibetan. See also n.124.

g.552 great and lofty royal family

rgyal rigs che zhing mtho ba'i rigs

རྒྱལ་རིགས་ཆེ་ཞིང་མཐོ་བའི་རིགས།

kṣatriyamahāśālakula

Note that the metaphor within the Sanskrit term (“a great sal tree”) is here interpreted in the Tibetan term. In equivalent passages in other versions of the sūtra, the metaphorical part of the term is rendered literally in the Tibetan. See also n.124.

g.553 great compassion

snying rje chen po

སྤྱིང་རྗེ་ཆེན་པོ།

mahākaruṇā

Not defined as such in this text, but in the Ten Thousand (2.7) great compassion is described as “unstinting loving kindness toward all beings, when there are actually no beings.”

g.554 great loving kindness

byams pa chen po

བྱམས་པ་ཆེན་པོ།

mahāmaitrī

Not defined as such in this text, but in the Ten Thousand (2.7) great loving kindness is described as “action in which the tathāgatas engage on behalf of all beings, treating enemies and friends identically.”

g.555 great ornament

rgyan chen po

རྒྱན་ཆེན་པོ།

mahāvīyūha

The 109th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.556 great trichiliocosm

stong gsum gyi stong chen po'i 'jig rten gyi khams

སྟོང་གསུམ་གྱི་སྟོང་ཆེན་པོའི་འཇིག་རྟེན་གྱི་ཁམས།

trisāhasramahāsāhasralokadhātu

A vast third-order universe comprising one thousand dichiliocosms, i.e., one billion world systems according to traditional Indian cosmology. See also n.-372.

g.557 Great Vehicle

theg pa chen po

ཐེག་པ་ཆེན་པོ།

mahāyāna

When the Buddhist teachings are classified according to their power to lead beings to an enlightened state, a distinction is made between the teachings of the Lesser Vehicle, which emphasizes the individual's own freedom from cyclic existence as the primary motivation and goal, and those of the Great Vehicle, which emphasizes altruism and has the liberation of all beings as the principal objective. As the term "Great Vehicle" implies, the path followed by bodhisattvas is analogous to a large carriage that can transport a vast number of people to liberation, as compared to a smaller vehicle for the individual practitioner.

g.558 Guhagupta

skyob sbed

སྐྱོབ་སྐྱེད།

Name of a bodhisattva, sometimes also found as Guhyagupta; the Tibetan rendering in the Eighteen Thousand is phug sbas.

g.559 hair as black as a bee

dbu skra bung ba ltar gnag pa dang ldan pa

དབུ་སྐྱོ་བུང་བ་ལྟར་གནག་པ་དང་ལྷན་པ།

bhramarasadrśakeśa

Seventy-fourth of the eighty minor marks.

g.560 hairs that grow distinctly, curling to the right

g.628 intrinsic nature

rang bzhin

རང་བཞིན།

svabhāva

This term (also rendered here as “inherent existence” and “inherent nature”) literally means “own-being” and can be used in an ordinary sense to denote the most fundamental or characteristic quality, property, or nature of things. In Mahāyāna literature it is also used in several different ways in the examination of the ontological status of phenomena, most frequently in statements denying that phenomena may ultimately possess any such existence or nature, objectively in their own right, apart from ignorantly attributed concepts and designations. However, in the Yogācāra system and later literature the incompleteness of an ontological status is described in three or more successive levels or aspects that also use modulations of the same term; see “three natures.”

g.629 introduction to the letters

yi ge la 'jug pa

jambunadī

g.635 Jambudvīpa

'dzam bu gling

འཛམ་བུ་གླིང་།

jambudvīpa

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The name of the southern continent in Buddhist cosmology, which can signify either the known human world, or more specifically the Indian subcontinent, literally “the jambu island/continent.” Jambu is the name used for a range of plum-like fruits from trees belonging to the genus Szygium, particularly Szygium jambos and Szygium cumini, and it has commonly been rendered “rose apple,” although “black plum” may be a less misleading term. Among various explanations given for the continent being so named, one (in the Abhidharmakośa) is that a jambu tree grows in its northern mountains beside Lake Anavatapta, mythically considered the source of the four great rivers of India, and that the continent is therefore named from the tree or the fruit. Jambudvīpa has the Vajrāsana at its center and is the only continent upon which buddhas attain awakening.

g.640 kācalindika

ka tsa lin di ka

ཀ་ཙ་ལིན་དི་ཀ།

kācalindika

A frequent simile for softness, thought to refer either (1) to the down of the kācilindika or kācalindika bird (see Lamotte, Etienne, La Concentration de la Marche Héroïque, Bruxelles: Peeters 1975, p. 261, n321), or (2) to a tropical tree bearing silken pods, similar to kapok, from which garments were made, and identified (Monier Williams p. 266) with Abrus precatorius.

g.641 kalaviṅka bird

ka la ping ka

ཀ་ལ་ཕིང་ཀ།

kalaviṅka

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

In Buddhist literature refers to a mythical bird whose call is said to be far more beautiful than that of all other birds, and so compelling that it can be heard even before the bird has hatched. The call of the kalaviṅka is thus used as an analogy to describe the sound of the discourse of bodhisattvas as being far superior to that of śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, even before bodhisattvas attain awakening. In some cases, the kalaviṅka also takes on mythical characteristics, being depicted as part human, part bird. It is also the sixteenth of the eighty designs on the palms and soles of a tathāgata.

While it is equated to an Indian bird renowned for its beautiful song, there is some uncertainty regarding the identity of the kalaviṅka; some dictionaries declare it to be a type of Indian cuckoo (probably Eudynamys scolopacea, also known as the asian koel) or a red and green sparrow (possibly Amandava amandava, also known as the red avadavat).

g.642 karma

las

ལས། karman

The impact of past actions in the present and future. Also translated here as “past action.”

g.643 Kauśika

kau shi ka

ཀོ་ཤི་ཀ།

kauśika

The name by which the Buddha (and other interlocutors) address Śakra (q.v.). Kauśika is a Brahmanical clan name, and its use as a personal name for Śakra is said to be a reference to his identity in his previous human rebirth. For more details of Śakra’s role in this text, see i.93.

g.646 kinnara

mi'am ci

མི་འམ་ཅི།

kinnara

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A class of nonhuman beings that resemble humans to the degree that their very name—which means “is that human?”—suggests some confusion as to their divine status. Kinnaras are mythological beings found in both Buddhist and Brahmanical literature, where they are portrayed as creatures half human, half animal. They are often depicted as highly skilled celestial musicians.

ūrdhvāṅgraromatā

Tenth of the thirty-two major marks.

g.691 line

tshigs bcad · shlo ka

ཚིགས་བཅད། · ལྟོ་ཀ།

śloka

The term usually refers to a unit of metrical verse, most commonly in Sanskrit literature a couplet of two sixteen-syllable lines (pāda), each of which can be subdivided into two half-lines of eight syllables. In the Tibetan translations a śloka is usually rendered as a four-line verse. However, the term is also used (especially in catalogs of canonical works) as a unit measuring the length of texts written in prose or in a mixture of prose and verse, in which case it simply measures thirty-two syllables. The titles of the principal Prajñā-pāramitā sūtras, most of which are written in prose, identify them by including mention of their length in ślokas, usually translated in English as “in nnn lines.” The original titles, even in their long form, include only the number itself, and that this refers to the length in ślokas is by convention inferred.

g.704 luminosity

'od gsal ba

འོད་གསལ་བ།

prabhāsvāra

In the context of the nature of mind, luminosity refers to the subtlest level of mind, i.e., the fundamental, essential nature of all cognitive events. Though ever present within all beings, this luminosity becomes manifest only when the gross mind has ceased to function. It is said that such a dissolution is experienced by ordinary beings, naturally, at the time of death, but it can also be experientially cultivated through certain meditative practices.

g.705 magical display

sgyu ma

See “Great Vehicle.”

g.717 mahoraga

lto 'phye chen po

ལྷོ་འཕྱེ་ཆེན་པོ།

mahoraga

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Literally “great serpents,” mahoragas are supernatural beings depicted as large, subterranean beings with human torsos and heads and the lower bodies of serpents. Their movements are said to cause earthquakes, and they make up a class of subterranean geomantic spirits whose movement through the seasons and months of the year is deemed significant for construction projects.

g.718 Maitreya

byams pa

བྱམས་པ།

maitreya

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The bodhisattva Maitreya is an important figure in many Buddhist traditions, where he is unanimously regarded as the buddha of the future era. He is said to currently reside in the heaven of Tuṣita, as Śākyamuni’s regent, where he awaits the proper time to take his final rebirth and become the fifth buddha in the Fortunate Eon, reestablishing the Dharma in this world after the teachings of the current buddha have disappeared. Within the Mahāyāna sūtras, Maitreya is elevated to the same status as other central bodhisattvas such as Mañjuśrī and Avalokiteśvara, and his name appears frequently in sūtras, either as the Buddha’s interlocutor or as a teacher of the Dharma. Maitreya literally means “Loving One.” He is also known as Ajita, meaning “Invincible.”

For more information on Maitreya, see, for example, the introduction to Maitreya’s Setting Out (Toh 198).

The 89th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.723 Mañjuśrī

'jam dpal

འཇམ་དཔལ།

mañjuśrī

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Mañjuśrī is one of the “eight close sons of the Buddha” and a bodhisattva who embodies wisdom. He is a major figure in the Mahāyāna sūtras, appearing often as an interlocutor of the Buddha. In his most well-known iconographic form, he is portrayed bearing the sword of wisdom in his right hand and a volume of the Prajñāpāramitāsūtra in his left. In addition to the epithet Kumārabhūta, which means “having a youthful form,” Mañjuśrī is also called Mañjughoṣa, Mañjusvara, and Pañcaśikha.

In this text:

A famous bodhisattva said in this text to reside in the world system of Padmavati, the buddhafiield of the Buddha Samantakusuma.

g.724 Mañjuśrīkumārabhūta

'jam dpal gzhon nur gyur pa

འཇམ་དཔལ་གཞོན་ནུར་གྱུར་པ།

mañjuśrīkumārabhūta

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Mañjuśrī is one of the “eight close sons of the Buddha” and a bodhisattva who embodies wisdom. He is a major figure in the Mahāyāna sūtras, appearing often as an interlocutor of the Buddha. In his most well-known iconographic form, he is portrayed bearing the sword of wisdom in his right hand and a volume of the Prajñāpāramitāsūtra in his left. In addition to the epithet Kumārabhūta, which means “having a youthful form,” Mañjuśrī is also called Mañjughoṣa, Mañjusvara, and Pañcaśikha.

g.725 māra

bdud

བདུད།

māra

As well as being the name of a deity who personifies obstructiveness to awakening, the term can apply generically to demons and demonic forces, and more abstractly to four kinds of malign or demonic influences which may impede the course of spiritual transformation. These include the impure aggregates; the afflicted mental states; desires and temptations; and submission to the “Lord of death,” at which point involuntary rebirth is perpetuated in cyclic existence. Also rendered here as “demonic force.”

g.726 Mārabalapramardin

bdud kyi stobs rab tu 'joms pa

བདུད་ཀྱི་སྟོབས་རབ་ཏུ་འཛོམས་པ། mārabalapramardin

Name of a bodhisattva.

g.727 marvelous events

g.728 maturity

skyon ma mchis pa · skyon med

སྐྱོན་མ་མཆིས་པ། · སྐྱོན་མེད།

niyāma

[Of great bodhisattva beings]. While “immaturity” (āma, skyon) suggests rawness—something that is uncooked, unrefined, and flawed—here the term “maturity” implies certitude, refinement, cooking, softening, and flawlessness.

g.729 maturity with respect to all phenomena

chos skyon med pa nyid

ཚོས་སྐྱོན་མེད་པ་ཉིད།

dharmanyāmatā

See “maturity.”

g.730 Maudgalyāyana

maud gal gyi bu

མོད་གལ་གྱི་བུ།

maudgalyāyana

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the principal śrāvaka disciples of the Buddha, paired with Śāriputra. He was renowned for his miraculous powers. His family clan was descended from Mudgala, hence his name Maudgalyāyana, “the son of Mudgala’s descendants.” Respectfully referred to as Mahāmaudgalyāyana, “Great Maudgalyāyana.”

g.731 meditative absorption

snyoms par 'jug pa

སྐྱོམས་པར་འཇུག་པ།

samāpatti

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Sanskrit literally means “attainment,” and is used to refer specifically to meditative attainment and to particular meditative states. The Tibetan translators interpreted it as sama-āpatti, which suggests the idea of “equal” or “level”; however, they also parsed it as sam-āpatti, in which case it would have the sense of “concentration” or “absorption,” much like samādhi, but with the added sense of “attainment.”

In this text:

Also rendered here as “absorption.”

g.732 meditative concentration bsam gtan

བསམ་གཏན།

dhyāna

Meditative concentration is defined as the one-pointed abiding in an undistracted state of mind free from afflicted mental states. It is an advanced form of calm abiding, where often both calm abiding and penetrative insight may be present in perfect union. Four states of meditative concentration are identified as being conducive to birth within the realm of form, each of which has three phases of intensity. However, in the context of the Great Vehicle, meditative concentration is the fifth of the six perfections. See also “four meditative concentrations” and 9.32.

g.733 meditative stability

ting nge 'dzin

ཉིང་ངེ་འཛིན།

samādhi

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

In a general sense, samādhi can describe a number of different meditative states. In the Mahāyāna literature, in particular in the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras, we find extensive lists of different samādhis, numbering over one hundred.

In a more restricted sense, and when understood as a mental state, samādhi is defined as the one-pointedness of the mind (cittaikāgratā), the ability to remain on the same object over long periods of time. The Draḥor Bamponyipa (sgra sbyor bam po gnyis pa) commentary on the Mahāvīyūtpatti explains the term samādhi as referring to the instrument through which mind and mental states “get collected,” i.e., it is by the force of samādhi that the continuum of mind and mental states becomes collected on a single point of reference without getting distracted.

In this text:

A generic name for the meditative stabilities enumerated in the present sūtra. There are several sets of named meditative stabilities in the text: (a) an abbreviated set of 32 in chapter 4, 4.5; (b) a longer list of 119 in chapter 6, 6.20; (c) a similar list in chapter 8, 8.247, followed by an explanation of each; (d) a list of 51 manifested by Sadāprarudita in chapter 73, in 73.17; and (e) a further 24 in which Sadāprarudita establishes certainty in chapter 75, 75.30. Additional meditative stabilities are mentioned in other places in the text. These lists differ slightly from their equivalents in the other long Prajñāpāramitā sūtras.

g.734 meditative stability devoid of both ideation and scrutiny mi rtog mi dpyod pa'i ting nge 'dzin

vaiśyavarṇa

Third of the four classes of traditional Indian society.

g.742 merit

bsod nams

བསོད་ནམས།

punya

Merit refers to the wholesome tendencies imprinted in the mind as a result of positive and skillful thoughts, words, and actions that ripen in the experience of happiness and well-being. According to the Greater Vehicle, it is important to dedicate the merit of one's wholesome actions to the benefit of all beings, ensuring that others also experience the results of the positive actions generated.

g.743 Merukūṭa

ri bo'i zom

g.756 Mount Sumeru

ri rab · rgyal po ri rab

རི་རབ། · རྒྱལ་པོ་རི་རབ།

sumeru

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

According to ancient Buddhist cosmology, this is the great mountain forming the axis of the universe. At its summit is Sudarśana, home of Śakra and his thirty-two gods, and on its flanks live the asuras. The mount has four sides facing the cardinal directions, each of which is made of a different precious stone. Surrounding it are several mountain ranges and the great ocean where the four principal island continents lie: in the south, Jambudvīpa (our world); in the west, Godāniya; in the north, Uttarakuru; and in the east, Pūrvavideha. Above it are the abodes of the desire realm gods. It is variously referred to as Meru, Mount Meru, Sumeru, and Mount Sumeru.

g.757 multifacetedness of Mount Sumeru

g.759 nāga

klu

ལྷ།

nāga

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A class of nonhuman beings who live in subterranean aquatic environments, where they guard wealth and sometimes also teachings. Nāgas are associated with serpents and have a snakelike appearance. In Buddhist art and in written accounts, they are regularly portrayed as half human and half snake, and they are also said to have the ability to change into human form.

Some nāgas are Dharma protectors, but they can also bring retribution if they are disturbed. They may likewise fight one another, wage war, and destroy the lands of others by causing lightning, hail, and flooding.

g.760 Nāgārjuna

klu grub

ལྷ་ལྷུབ།

nāgārjuna

Indian philosopher and commentator (fl. second century), founder of the Madhyamaka school from his writings based principally on the Prajñā-pāramitā sūtras, and traditionally said to have brought the Perfection of Wisdom in One Hundred Thousand Lines from the realm of the nāgas to the human realm.

g.770 nature of reality

chos nyid

ཚོས་ཉིད།

dharmatā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The real nature, true quality, or condition of things. Throughout Buddhist discourse this term is used in two distinct ways. In one, it designates the relative nature that is either the essential characteristic of a specific phenomenon, such as the heat of fire and the moisture of water, or the defining feature of a specific term or category. The other very important and widespread way it is used is to designate the ultimate nature of all phenomena, which cannot be conveyed in conceptual, dualistic terms and is often synonymous with emptiness or the absence of intrinsic existence.

In this text:

Also rendered here simply as “reality.”

mthar gyis gnas pa'i snyoms par 'jug pa dgu

མཐར་གྱིས་གནས་པའི་སྟོན་པ་པར་འཇུག་པ་དགུ

navānupūrvāvihārasamāpatti

The nine levels of meditative absorption that one may attain during a human life, namely the four meditative concentrations corresponding to the realm of form (caturdhyāna), the four formless meditative absorptions (caturārūpya-samāpatti), and the attainment of the state of cessation. For an explanation of the nine serial steps of meditative absorption in this text, see 8.37. These are also summarized in Jamgon Kongtrul TOK Book 6, Pt. 2: pp. 428–29.

g.776 nine states of beings

sems can gyi gnas dgu

སེམས་ཅན་གྱི་གནས་དགུ

navasattvāvāsa

The nine states of beings (navasattvāvāsa, sems can gyi gnas dgu, Degé Tengyur vol. 91, F.41.a ) comprise (1) human beings and certain gods exemplifying those who have different bodies and different perceptions (lus tha dad cing 'du shes tha dad pa dag dper na mi rnams dang lha kha cig); (2) the gods appearing in the first tier of the Brahmakāyika realms, exemplifying those who have different bodies and identical perceptions (lus tha dad pa la 'du shes gcig pa dag dper na tshangs ris kyi lha dag dang po 'byung ba), (3) the gods of the Ābhāsvara realms, exemplifying those who have identical bodies and different perceptions (lus gcig la 'du shes tha dad pa dag dper na 'od gsal ba rnams); (4) the gods of the Śubhakarṣna realms, exemplifying those who have identical bodies and identical perceptions (lus gcig la 'du shes gcig pa dag dper na dge rgyas kyi lha rnams); (5) the activity field of infinite space (nam mkha' mtha' yas skye mched); (6) the activity field of infinite consciousness (rnam shes mtha' yas skye mched); (7) the activity field of nothing-at-all (ci yang med pa'i skye mched); [(8) the activity field of neither perception nor nonperception ('du shes med 'du shes med min gyi skye mched)]; and (9) the activity field of nonperception ('du shes med pa'i skye mched). The missing one is included in Nordrang Orgyan, pp. 2034–35.

g.777 Nirmāṇarata

'phrul dga'

འཕྲུལ་དགའ།

nirmāṇarata

Fifth god realm of desire, meaning “Delighting in Emanation.”

g.778 nirvāṇa

mya ngan las 'das pa

མྱ་ངན་ལས་འདས་པ།

nirvāṇa

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

In Sanskrit, the term nirvāṇa literally means “extinguishment” and the Tibetan mya ngan las 'das pa literally means “gone beyond sorrow.” As a general term, it refers to the cessation of all suffering, afflicted mental states (kleśa), and causal processes (karman) that lead to rebirth and suffering in cyclic existence, as well as to the state in which all such rebirth and suffering has permanently ceased.

More specifically, three main types of nirvāṇa are identified. The first type of nirvāṇa, called nirvāṇa with remainder (sopadhīṣeṣanirvāṇa), is when an arhat or buddha has attained awakening but is still dependent on the conditioned aggregates until their lifespan is exhausted. At the end of life, given that there are no more causes for rebirth, these aggregates cease and no new aggregates arise. What occurs then is called nirvāṇa without remainder (anupadhīṣeṣanirvāṇa), which refers to the unconditioned element (dhātu) of nirvāṇa in which there is no remainder of the aggregates. The Mahāyāna teachings distinguish the final nirvāṇa of buddhas from that of arhats, the latter of which is not considered ultimate. The buddhas attain what is called nonabiding nirvāṇa (apratiṣṭhitanirvāṇa), which transcends the extremes of saṃsāra and nirvāṇa, i.e., existence and peace. This is the nirvāṇa that is the goal of the Mahāyāna path.

g.779 Nityapramudita

rtaḡ par rab tu dga' ba

རྟམ་པར་རབ་ཏུ་དགའ་བ།

nityapramudita

g.788 noble one

'phags pa

འཕགས་པ།

ārya

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Sanskrit ārya has the general meaning of a noble person, one of a higher class or caste. In Buddhist literature, depending on the context, it often means specifically one who has gained the realization of the path and is superior for that reason. In particular, it applies to stream enterers, once-returners, non-returners, and worthy ones (arhats) and is also used as an epithet of bodhisattvas. In the five-path system, it refers to someone who has achieved at least the path of seeing (darśanamārga).

g.789 noble son

rigs kyi bu

རིགས་ཀྱི་བུ།

kulaputra

Indian term of address used by a teacher regarding a student. While originally related to family lineage, in Great Vehicle sūtras the term is also sometimes interpreted as implying that the person so addressed has entered the lineage of the buddhas, i.e., is a follower of the bodhisattva path.

g.858 Patient Endurance

mi mjed

མི་མཇེད།

saha

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The name for our particular world system, the universe of a thousand million worlds, or trichiliocosm, in which our four-continent world is located.

Although it is sometimes said that it can refer only to our own four-continent world around Mount Meru, the sūtras largely seem to equate it with this trichiliocosm, and this is confirmed by scholars like Jamgön Kongtrul (see The Treasury of Knowledge, Book One). Each trichiliocosm is ruled by a god Brahmā; thus, in this context, he bears the title of Sahāmpati, Lord of Sahā. Our world system of Sahā, or Sahālokadhātu, is also described as being the buddhafiield of the Buddha Śākyamuni. He teaches the Dharma here to beings who adhere to inferior ways and perceive this universe as an impure buddhafield contaminated with the five degenerations (pañcakaṣāya, snyigs ma lnga): the degeneration of time, sentient beings, place, lifespan, and mental afflictions (see The Teaching of Vimalakīrti, Toh 176). It is also mentioned as the field of activity of all the thousand buddhas of this Fortunate Eon (see The White Lotus of Compassion, Toh 112).

The name Sahā possibly derives from the Sanskrit √sah, “to bear, endure, or withstand.” It is often interpreted as alluding to the inhabitants of this world having to endure suffering. The Tibetan translation, mi mjed, follows along the same lines. It literally means “not unbearable,” in the sense that beings here are able to bear the suffering they experience.

g.859 peace

zhi ba

ཞི་བ།

śānti

Also translated here as “calm.”

g.860 people

shed bdag

g.894 pratyekabuddha

rang sangs rgyas · rang rgyal

རང་སངས་རྒྱས། · རང་རྒྱལ།

pratyekabuddha

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Literally, “buddha for oneself” or “solitary realizer.” Someone who, in his or her last life, attains awakening entirely through their own contemplation, without relying on a teacher. Unlike the awakening of a fully realized buddha (samyaksambuddha), the accomplishment of a pratyekabuddha is not regarded as final or ultimate. They attain realization of the nature of dependent origination, the selflessness of the person, and a partial realization of the selflessness of phenomena, by observing the suchness of all that arises through interdependence. This is the result of progress in previous lives but, unlike a buddha, they do not have the necessary merit, compassion or motivation to teach others. They are named as “rhinoceros-like” (khadḡaviṣāṇakalpa) for their preference for staying in solitude or as “congregators” (vargacārin) when their preference is to stay among peers.

g.895 precious seal

- g.900 prophetic declaration lung bstan pa ལུང་བསྟན་པ། vyākaraṇa
 In the evolution of bodhisattvas, the formal prophesy or prophetic declaration made by a buddha that they will attain awakening at a specified future time is a key event frequently described in the sūtras and other narrative accounts. It is also the third of the twelve branches of the scriptures.
- g.901 provision
tshogs ཚོགས། sambhāra

This term denotes the two provisions of merit and wisdom that are gathered by bodhisattvas on the path to consummate buddhahood. The fulfilment of the authentic provision of merit (pun̄yasambhāra, bsod nams kyi tshogs) and the authentic provision of wisdom (jñānasambhāra, ye shes kyi tshogs) constitutes the fruition of the entire path according to the Great Vehicle, resulting in the maturation of the buddha body of form and the buddha body of reality, respectively.

g.902 Puṇyaprasava

bsod nams 'phel

བསོད་ནམས་འཕེལ།

pun̄yaprasava

Literally meaning “Increasing Merit,” the more usual name for what is, in the Prajñāpāramitā literature, the fifteenth of the sixteen levels of the god realm of form that correspond to the four meditative concentrations, and in this text and in the Hundred Thousand is instead rendered Apramāṇabr̥hat (q.v.).

Puṇyaprasava is used in the later Sanskrit manuscripts that correspond more closely to the eight-chapter Tengyur version of this text. In other genres, it is the eleventh of twelve levels corresponding to the four meditative concentrations.

g.919 Rājagṛha

rgyal po'i khab

རྒྱལ་པོའི་ཁབ།

rājagṛha

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The ancient capital of Magadha prior to its relocation to Pāṭaliputra during the Mauryan dynasty, Rājagṛha is one of the most important locations in Buddhist history. The literature tells us that the Buddha and his saṅgha spent a considerable amount of time in residence in and around Rājagṛha—in nearby places, such as the Vulture Peak Mountain (Gṛdhrakūṭaparvata), a major site of the Mahāyāna sūtras, and the Bamboo Grove (Veṇuvana)—enjoying the patronage of King Bimbisāra and then of his son King Ajātaśatru. Rājagṛha is also remembered as the location where the first Buddhist monastic council was held after the Buddha Śākyamuni passed into parinirvāṇa. Now known as Rajgir and located in the modern Indian state of Bihar.

Lit. “thusness” or “suchness.” The ultimate nature of things, or the way things are beyond all concepts and duality, as opposed to the way they appear to unawakened beings.

g.931 reality

chos nyid

ཚོས་ཉིད།

dharmatā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The real nature, true quality, or condition of things. Throughout Buddhist discourse this term is used in two distinct ways. In one, it designates the relative nature that is either the essential characteristic of a specific phenomenon, such as the heat of fire and the moisture of water, or the defining feature of a specific term or category. The other very important and widespread way it is used is to designate the ultimate nature of all phenomena, which cannot be conveyed in conceptual, dualistic terms and is often synonymous with emptiness or the absence of intrinsic existence.

In this text:

Also rendered here as “nature of reality.”

g.932 realm of desire

*'dod pa'i kham*s

འདོད་པའི་ཁམས།

kāmadhātu

Includes the hell beings; pretas; animals; humans; asuras; and different levels of god realms, for which see “god.”

g.933 realm of form

*gzugs kyi kham*s

གཟུགས་ཀྱི་ཁམས།

rūpadhātu

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the three realms of saṃsāra in Buddhist cosmology, it is characterized by subtle materiality. Here beings, though subtly embodied, are not driven primarily by the urge for sense gratification. It consists of seventeen heavens structured according to the four concentrations of the form realm (rūpāvācaradhyāna), the highest five of which are collectively called “pure abodes” (śuddhāvāsa). The form realm is located above the desire realm (kāmadhātu) and below the formless realm (ārūpyadhātu).

g.934 realm of formlessness

*gzugs med pa'i kham*s

གཟུགས་མེད་པའི་ཁམས། ārūpyadhātu

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The highest and subtlest of the three realms of saṃsāra in Buddhist cosmology. Here beings are no longer bound by materiality and enjoy a purely mental state of absorption. It is divided in four levels according to each of the four formless concentrations (ārūpyāvācaradhyāna), namely, the Sphere of Infinite Space (ākāśānantyāyatana), the Sphere of Infinite Consciousness (viññānānantyāyatana), the Sphere of Nothingness (akiñcanyāyatana), and the Sphere of Neither Perception nor Non-perception (naiṅvaśaṃjñānāśaṃjñāyatana). The formless realm is located above the other two realms of saṃsāra, the form realm (rūpadhātu) and the desire realm (kāmadhātu).

g.935 realm of phenomena

chos kyi dbyings

ཚོས་ཀྱི་དབྱིངས།

dharmadhātu

Interpreted variously—given the many connotations of both dharma and dhātu—as the realm, element, or nature, of phenomena, reality, or truth, but generally taken to denote the entirety of phenomena and particularly their nature as a synonym of other terms designating the ultimate. In Tibetan, instances of the Sanskrit dharmadhātu with this range of meanings (rendered chos kyi dbyings) are distinguished from instances of the same Sanskrit term with its rather different meaning related to mental perception in the context of the twelve sense sources and eighteen elements (rendered chos kyi khams).

g.936 rebirth process

g.960 Śakra

brgya byin

བརྒྱ་ཕྱིན།

śakra

The epithet for the Vedic god Indra used most commonly in Buddhist literature. Śakra is chief of the gods of the Trāyastriṃśa realm, and appears frequently during the life of the Buddha in a supportive role. For more detail, particularly on his role in this text, see i.93. He is addressed by the Buddha and other interlocutors by his personal name, Kauśika (q.v.). The Tibetan translation brgya byin (meaning “one hundred sacrifices”) follows the traditional Sanskrit semantic gloss that Śakra is an abbreviation of Śata-kratu, “one who has performed a hundred sacrifices.” Each world with a central Sumeru has a Śakra.

g.1047 six perfections

pha rol tu phyin pa drug

ཕར་ལོ་ཏུ་ཕྱིན་པ་རྒྱལ། ṣaṭpāramitā

The practice of the six perfections, comprising generosity, ethical discipline, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom or discriminative awareness, is the foundation of the entire bodhisattva's way of life. These six are known as “perfections” when they are motivated by an altruistic intention to attain full enlightenment for the sake of all beings, when they are undertaken within a sixfold combination of all the perfections, and when they are performed with an awareness of the emptiness of the agent, the object, and their interaction. Some of the more detailed discussions of different aspects of the six perfections in this text include 13.77-13.93, 17.-31-17.40, 23.35-23.39, 25.5-25.7, 42.17-42.48, 51.14-52.60, and 65.35-65.59.

The concept of skillful means is central to the understanding of the Buddha's enlightened deeds and the many scriptures that are revealed contingent to the needs, interests, and mental dispositions of specific types of individuals. According to the Great Vehicle, training in skillful means collectively denotes the first five of the six perfections when integrated with wisdom, the sixth perfection, to form a union of discriminative awareness and means.

g.1069 śrāvaka

nyan thos

ཉན་ཐོས།

śrāvaka

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Sanskrit term śrāvaka, and the Tibetan nyan thos, both derived from the verb “to hear,” are usually defined as “those who hear the teaching from the Buddha and make it heard to others.” Primarily this refers to those disciples of the Buddha who aspire to attain the state of an arhat seeking their own liberation and nirvāṇa. They are the practitioners of the first turning of the wheel of the Dharma on the four noble truths, who realize the suffering inherent in saṃsāra and focus on understanding that there is no independent self. By conquering afflicted mental states (kleśa), they liberate themselves, attaining first the stage of stream enterers at the path of seeing, followed by the stage of once-returners who will be reborn only one more time, and then the stage of non-returners who will no longer be reborn into the desire realm. The final goal is to become an arhat. These four stages are also known as the “four results of spiritual practice.”

g.1070 Śreṇika

phreng ba can

ཕྱེང་བ་ཅན།

śreṇika

Name of a mendicant (parivrājaka), also called Śreṇika Vatsagotra (Pali Vacchagotra). His name is also rendered bzo sbyangs and sde can in Tibetan in other Prajñāpāramitā texts. See also n.167.

g.1071 śrīvatsa

dpal gyi be'u

དཔལ་གྱི་བེའུ།

śrīvatsa

An auspicious design on the Buddha's body, mentioned in this text at his heart (in the form of a curl of hair in that shape) as well as on his hands and feet (in the form of lines in the skin). It is often depicted in Tibetan Buddhist tradition as the "eternal knot" symbol, but takes different forms as a motif shared by other traditions of Indian origin. It is said, for example, to be an auspicious mark on Viṣṇu's chest that represents the insignia of his consort Lakṣmī in the form of an inverted triangle or the shape of a four-petaled flower.

g.1090 suffering

sdug bsngal

སྤུག་བསྐྱེད།

duḥkha

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The first of the four truths of the noble ones. The term “suffering” includes all essentially unsatisfactory experiences of life in cyclic existence, whether physical or mental. These comprise (1) the suffering of suffering, i.e., the physical sensations and mental experiences that are self-evident as suffering and toward which spontaneous feelings of aversion arise; (2) the suffering of change, i.e., all experiences that are normally recognized as pleasant and desirable, but which are nonetheless suffering in that persistent indulgence in these always results in changing attitudes of dissatisfaction and boredom; and (3) the suffering of the pervasive conditioning underlying the round of birth, aging, and death.

g.1091 sugata

bde bar gshegs pa

བདེ་བར་གཤེགས་པ། sugata

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

One of the standard epithets of the buddhas. A recurrent explanation offers three different meanings for su- that are meant to show the special qualities of “accomplishment of one’s own purpose” (svārthasampad) for a complete buddha. Thus, the Sugata is “well” gone, as in the expression su-rūpa (“having a good form”); he is gone “in a way that he shall not come back,” as in the expression su-naṣṭa-jvara (“a fever that has utterly gone”); and he has gone “without any remainder” as in the expression su-pūrṇa-ghaṭa (“a pot that is completely full”). According to Buddhaghōṣa, the term means that the way the Buddha went (Skt. gata) is good (Skt. su) and where he went (Skt. gata) is good (Skt. su).

In this text:

Here used also as an epithet of the Buddha Śākyamuni.

g.1119 tathāgata

de bzhin gshegs pa

དེ་བཞིན་གཤེགས་པ།

tathāgata

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

A frequently used synonym for buddha. According to different explanations, it can be read as tathā-gata, literally meaning “one who has thus gone,” or as tathā-āgata, “one who has thus come.” Gata, though literally meaning “gone,” is a past passive participle used to describe a state or condition of existence. Tatha(tā), often rendered as “suchness” or “thusness,” is the quality or condition of things as they really are, which cannot be conveyed in conceptual, dualistic terms. Therefore, this epithet is interpreted in different ways, but in general it implies one who has departed in the wake of the buddhas of the past, or one who has manifested the supreme awakening dependent on the reality that does not abide in the two extremes of existence and quiescence. It is also often used as a specific epithet of the Buddha Śākyamuni.

g.1129 ten levels

sa bcu

ས་བརྒྱ།

daśabhūmi

There are two sets of ten levels mentioned in the Prajñāpāramitā literature. One is the same as that found in many other scriptures such as the Ten Bhūmis (Toh 44-31) of the Buddhāvataṃsaka. These are (1) Perfect Joy (pramuditā), (2) Stainless (vimalā), (3) Shining (prabhākarī), (4) Brilliance (arciṣmatī), (5) Difficult to Conquer (sudurjayā), (6) Manifested (abhimukhī), (7) Gone Far (dūraṃgamā), (8) Unwavering (acalā), (9) Perfect Understanding (sādhumatī), and (10) Cloud of Dharma (dharmameghā).

The other set of ten levels comprise (1) the level of bright insight, (2) the level of the spiritual family, (3) the eighth-lowest level, (4) the level of insight, (5) the level of attenuated refinement, (6) the level of no attachment, (7) the level of spiritual achievement (of śrāvakas/arhats), (8) the level of the pratyekabuddhas, (9) the level of the bodhisattvas, and (10) the actual level of the buddhas. (See also n.314).

g.1130 ten modes of conduct

spyod pa bcu

སྟོན་པ་བཅུ། daśacaryā

These ten modes of conduct are enumerated in the Śatasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitā-br̥haṭṭikā (Toh 3807, Degé Tengyur vol. 91, F.37.a) as follows: (1) writing of the sacred scriptures (dam pa'i chos yi ger 'dri ba), (2) reading them (klog pa), (3) chanting them (kha ton byed pa), (4) bestowing them on others (gzhan la sbyin pa), (5) retaining them (i.e., their words and meaning) ('chang ba), (6) making offerings to them (mchod pa byed pa), (7) listening to others recite/expound them (nyan pa), (8) reflecting upon them (sems pa), (9) meditating on them (sgom pa), and (10) teaching them to others (gzhan dag la ston pa). An alternative listing is found in Ch. 43 of the Buddhāvataṃsaka, comprising (1) conduct that aims to bring all beings to maturation, (2) conduct that aims to investigate all phenomena, (3) conduct that aims to apply all trainings, (4) conduct that aims to accumulate all the roots of virtuous action, (5) conduct that aims to achieve one-pointed meditative stability, (6) conduct that aims to understand wisdom, (7) conduct that aims to cultivate meditation, (8) conduct that aims to adorn the buddhafiels, (9) conduct that aims to venerate spiritual teachers, and (10) conduct that aims to make offerings to and serve the tathāgatas. See Nordrang Orgyan, pp. 2259–60.

g.1131 ten nonvirtuous actions

mi dge ba bcu'i las

མི་དགོ་བ་བརྒྱའི་ལས།

daśākuśalakarman

Killing of living creatures, theft, sexual misconduct, lying, slander, verbal abuse, irresponsible chatter, covetousness, malice, and wrong views. See also “nonvirtuous phenomena.”

g.1132 ten powers

stobs bcu

སྟོབས་བརྒྱ།

daśabala

See “ten powers of the tathāgatas.”

g.1133 ten powers of the tathāgatas

de bzhin gshegs pa'i stobs bcu

དེ་བཞིན་གཤེགས་པའི་སྟོབས་བརྒྱ།

daśatathāgatabala

The ten powers of the tathāgatas, as presented in 9.37, are (1) definitive knowledge that phenomena that are possible are indeed possible, and definitive knowledge that phenomena that are impossible are indeed impossible; (2) definitive knowledge, through possibilities and causes, of the maturation of the past, future, and present actions, and of those who undertake such actions; (3) definitive knowledge of various realms and their multiple constituents; (4) definitive knowledge of the diversity of inclinations and the multiplicity of inclinations that other beings, other individuals, have; (5) definitive knowledge of whether the acumen of other beings, other individuals, is superior or inferior; (6) definitive knowledge of the paths that lead anywhere; (7) definitive knowledge of all the afflicted and purified mental states and their emergence, with respect to the faculties, powers, branches of enlightenment, meditative concentrations, aspects of liberation, meditative stabilities, and formless absorptions; (8) definitive knowledge of the recollection of multiple past abodes, ranging from the recollection of individual lifetimes to their circumstances, situations, and causes; (9) definitive knowledge through pure clairvoyance, transcending the vision of human beings, of the death, transmigration, and rebirth of beings; and (10) definitive knowledge that through one’s own extrasensory powers one has actualized, achieved, and maintained the liberation of mind and the liberation of wisdom in the state that is free from contaminants because all contaminants have ceased.

g.1134 ten recollections rjes su dran pa bcu

རྗེས་སུ་བྲན་པ་བཅུ།

daśānusmṛti

The ten recollections, listed in 2.5 and presented as a group in 9.30, are (1) recollection of the Buddha, (2) recollection of the Dharma, (3) recollection of the Saṅgha, (4) recollection of ethical discipline, (5) recollection of giving away, (6) recollection of the god realms, (7) recollection of disillusionment, (8) recollection of breathing, (9) recollection of death, and (10) recollection of the body. The first five are also included in the six recollections (q.v.).

g.1135 ten sense fields of complete suffusion

mtha' dag gi skye mched bcu

མཐའ་དག་གི་སྐྱེ་མཆེད་བཅུ།

daśakṛtsnāyatana

The ten sense fields of complete suffusion, as found enumerated in 62.56, comprise (1) complete suffusion of the earth element, (2) complete suffusion of the water element, (3) complete suffusion of the fire element, (4) complete suffusion of the wind element, (5) complete suffusion of blueness, (6) complete suffusion of yellowness, (7) complete suffusion of redness, (8) complete suffusion of whiteness, (9) complete suffusion of consciousness, and (10) complete suffusion of the space element. In the Ten Thousand and Eighteen Thousand, the Tibetan term is zad par gyi skye mched, and in ka F.28.b in this text it is chub pa'i skye mched.

g.1136 the way that an elephant gazes

glang po chen po'i lta stangs

གླང་པོ་ཆེན་པོའི་ལྷ་སྤངས།

nāgāvalokita

A simile that describes an undistracted, unmoving, but all-encompassing gaze.

g.1137 theft

ma byin par len pa

མ་བྱིན་པར་ལེན་པ།

adatādāna

Second of ten nonvirtuous actions. Literally, “taking what is not given.” Also translated as “stealing.”

g.1138 thick hair

dbu skra stug pa

དབུ་སྐྱ་སྐྱུག་པ།

citakeśa

Seventy-fifth of the eighty minor marks.

g.1139 thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment

byang chub kyi phyogs kyi chos sum cu rtsa bdun

བྱང་ལྷན་གྱི་ཕྱོགས་གྱི་ཚེས་སུམ་ཅུ་ཚུ་བདུན། saptatrimśabodhipakṣadharmā

The thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment comprise the four applications of mindfulness, the four correct exertions, the four supports for miraculous ability, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven branches of enlightenment, and the noble eightfold path. See Chapter 9. For a summary of the relevant Pāli and Sanskrit sources on all see the extensive discussion in Dayal (1932): pp. 80–164.

g.1140 thirty-two major marks of a great person

skyes bu chen po'i mtshan sum cu rtsa gnyis

སྐྱེས་བུ་ཚེན་པོའི་མཚན་སུམ་ཅུ་གཉིས།

dvātriṃśanmahāpuruṣalakṣaṇa

These are the major physical marks that identify the buddha form body and which also portend the advent of a wheel-turning emperor. As well as being listed in this and other Prajñāpāramitā sūtras (see 62.76 here in the Twenty-Five Thousand; the One Hundred Thousand, chapter 63; the Eighteen Thousand, 73.89; and the Ten Thousand, 2.15), they are also found detailed in the Play in Full (Lalitavistara), 7.98–7.103 and 26.147–26.175; Mahāyānopadeśa; Ratnagotravibhāgottaratantṛaśāstra, 3.17–25; Mahāvastu; and in the Pali Lakkhaṇasutta.

g.1141 thoroughbred

cang shes pa

ཅང་ཤེས་པ།

ājāneya

Meaning “thoroughbred horse,” the term is used here and in the introductory narratives of many sūtras as a metaphor for nobility.

g.1142 three categories

phung po gsum

ཕུང་པོ་གསུམ།

trirāśi

A division of beings into three according to their potential for receiving the Dharma. These categories are altered by the appearance of a buddha. The three are (1) those whose receptivity is certain (nges pa'i phung po, samyaktva-niyatarāśi), (2) those whose receptivity is unpredictable (ma nges pa'i phung po, aniyatarāśi), and (3) those whose nonreceptivity is certain (log par nges pa'i phung po, mithyātvaniyatarāśi). See also n.514.

g.1143 three faculties

dbang po gsum

དབང་པོ་གསུམ།

trīndriya

They are (1) the faculty whereby one will comprehend that which has not been comprehended (anājñātamañjñāsyāmīndriya, yongs su ma shes pa yongs su shes par bya ba'i dbang po), (2) the faculty of comprehension (ājñendriya, yongs su shes pa'i dbang po), and (3) the faculty of realization through comprehension (ājñātāvīndriya, yongs su shes pas rtogs pa'i dbang po).

g.1144 three fetters

kun du sbyor ba gsum

ཀུན་དུ་སྦྱོར་བ་གསུམ།

trisaṃyojana

The three fetters, as found in 18.21, comprise false views about the perishable composite (i.e., views of the self), doubt, and a sense of moral and ascetic supremacy.

g.1145 three gateways to liberation

rnam par thar pa'i sgo gsum

རྣམ་པར་ཐར་པའི་སློབ་གསུམ།

vimokṣamukha

These are (1) emptiness as a gateway to liberation, (2) signlessness as a gateway to liberation, and (3) wishlessness as a gateway to liberation. Among them, emptiness is characterized as the absence of inherent existence, signlessness as the absence of distinguishing marks, and aspirationlessness as the absence of hopes and fears.

g.1146 three knowledges

rig pa gsum

རིག་པ་གསུམ།

trividya

These comprise (1) knowledge through recollecting past lives (sngon gyi gnas rjes su dran pa'i rig pa); (2) knowledge of beings' death and rebirth (tshe 'pho ba dang skye ba shes pa'i rig pa), in some definitions expressed as knowledge through clairvoyance (lha'i mig gi shes pa); and (3) knowledge of the cessation of contaminants (zag pa zad pa shes pa'i rig pa). See Śatasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitā-bṛhaṭṭika (Toh 3807, Degé Tengyur vol. 91, F.39.b.)

g.1147 three lower realms

ngan song gsum

འན་སོང་གསུམ། tridurgati

A collective name for the realms of animals, anguished spirits, and denizens of the hells.

g.1148 three meditative stabilities

ting nge 'dzin gsum

ཉིང་ངེ་འཛིན་གསུམ།

trayaḥ samādhyah

These are listed as (1) the meditative stability of emptiness, (2) the meditative stability of signlessness, and (3) the meditative stability of wishlessness. For an explanation according to this text, see 9.26. Note that this term is also used in this text to refer to a different set of three meditative stabilities.

g.1149 three meditative stabilities

ting nge 'dzin gsum

ཉིང་ངེ་འཛིན་གསུམ།

trayaḥ samādhyah

These are listed as (1) the meditative stability endowed with ideation and scrutiny, (2) the meditative stability free from ideation and endowed merely with scrutiny, and (3) the meditative stability devoid of both ideation and scrutiny. For an explanation according to this text, see 9.29. Note that this term is also used in this text to refer to the usual set of three meditative stabilities: emptiness, signlessness, and wishlessness.

g.1150 three miracles

cho 'phrul gsum

ཚོ་འཕྲུལ་གསུམ།

triprātihārya

The three miracles are enumerated in 62.19 and in Kimura VI–VIII: p. 49 as miraculous magical abilities (rddhiprātihārya, rdzu 'phrul gyi cho 'phrul), miraculous revealing (ādeśanāprātihārya, yongs su bstan pa'i cho 'phrul), and miraculous instructing (anuśāsanaprātihārya, rjes su bstan pa'i cho 'phrul). See also Conze (1975): p. 476, who interprets instruction as the knowledge of others' thoughts. Nordrang Orgyan (2008): p. 231 additionally lists three alternative enumerations.

g.1151 three natures

ngo bo nyid gsum · mtshan nyid gsum · rang bzhin gsum

ངོ་བོ་ཉིད་གསུམ། · མཚན་ཉིད་གསུམ། · རང་བཞིན་གསུམ། trīsvabhāva · trividhā niḥsvabhāvatā

These comprise the imaginary, dependent, and consummate essenceless natures, which are elaborated particularly in the discourses associated with the third turning of the wheel. They are not directly discussed in this text but are similar to explanations in the Maitreya Chapter (chapter 72) and are also used as an underlying analytical key in some commentaries. See introduction i.111.

g.1152 three realms

khams gsum

ཁམས་གསུམ། tridhātu

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The three realms that contain all the various kinds of existence in saṃsāra: the desire realm, the form realm, and the formless realm.

g.1153 three spheres

'khor gsum

འཁོར་གསུམ།

trimaṇḍala

These three aspects, literally “circles” or “provinces,” are the doer, the action, and the object of the action.

g.1154 three vehicles

theg pa gsum

ཐེག་པ་གསུམ།

triyāna

The śrāvaka vehicle, the pratyekabuddha vehicle, and the bodhisattva vehicle.

g.1155 tīrthika

mu stegs can

མུ་སྟེགས་ཅན།

tīrthika

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Those of other religious or philosophical orders, contemporary with the early Buddhist order, including Jains, Jaṭilas, Ājīvikas, and Cārvākas. Tīrthika (“ford”) literally translates as “one belonging to or associated with (possessive suffix -ika) stairs for landing or for descent into a river,” or “a bathing place,” or “a place of pilgrimage on the banks of sacred streams” (Monier-Williams). The term may have originally referred to temple priests at river crossings or fords where travelers propitiated a deity before crossing. The Sanskrit term seems to have undergone metonymic transfer in referring to those able to ford the turbulent river of saṃsāra (as in the Jain tīrthaṅkaras, “ford makers”), and it came to be used in Buddhist sources to refer to teachers of rival religious traditions. The Sanskrit term is closely rendered by the Tibetan mu stegs pa: “those on the steps (stegs pa) at the edge (mu).”

g.1156 tolerance

bzod pa

བཟོད་པ།

kṣānti

Third of the six perfections.

g.1157 tongue that is extremely red

ljags shin du dmar ba

ལྷགས་ཤིན་དུ་དམར་བ།

raktajihva

Fiftieth of the eighty minor marks.

g.1158 tongue that is extremely slender

ljags shin du srab pa

ལྷགས་ཤིན་དུ་སྐབ་པ།

tanujihva

Forty-ninth of the eighty minor marks.

g.1159 tongue that is extremely soft

ljags shin du 'jam pa

ལྷགས་ཤིན་དུ་འདྲམ་པ།

mṛdujihva

Forty-eighth of the eighty minor marks.

g.1160 torso resembles that of a lion

seng ge'i ro stod lta bu

སེང་གའི་རོ་སྟོད་ལྷ་བུ།

siṃhapūroārdhakāyatā

Eighteenth of the thirty-two major marks.

g.1161 total illumination

kun tu snang ba

ཀུན་དུ་སྐྱང་བ།

samantāvabhāsa

The 38th meditative stability in chapters 6, and 8.

g.1162 transcendence of the range

yul las rgal ba

ཡུལ་ལས་རྒྱལ་བ།

viśamaśānti

The 77th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.1163 transcending all phenomena

chos thams cad las 'da' ba

ཚོས་ཐམས་ཅད་ལས་འདའ་བ། praticchedakara

The 84th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.1164 Trayastriṃśa

sum cu rtsa gsum

སུམ་རུ་རྩ་གསུམ།

trayastrimśa

Second god realm of desire, abode of the thirty-three gods.

g.1165 Tree at the Seat of Enlightenment

snying po byang chub kyi shing

སྒྲིབ་པོ་བྱང་ལུབ་ཀྱི་ཤིང་།

bodhimandavarṅka

The tree at Vajrāsana under which all the buddhas attain enlightenment.

g.1166 tree cotton

shing bal

ཤིང་བལ།

tūla · tūlikā

One of several kinds of cotton, probably from a tree of Gossypium species, among which are the diploid, Asian G. arboreum and G. herbaceum (cf. Monier Williams); Negi's Tibetan-Sanskrit dictionary also mentions five kinds of tūla, at least some of which are trees.

g.1167 truths of the noble ones

'phags pa'i bden pa

འཕགས་པའི་བདེན་པ།

āryasatya

See "four truths of the noble ones."

g.1168 turn the wheel of the Dharma

chos kyi 'khor lo bskor ba

ཚོས་ཀྱི་འཁོར་ལོ་བསྐྱོར་བ།

dharmacakrapravartana

This metaphor refers to the promulgation of the Buddhist teachings by the Buddha.

g.1169 Tuṣita

dga' ldan

དགའ་ལྷན།

tuṣita

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Tuṣita (or sometimes Saṃtuṣita), literally “Joyous” or “Contented,” is one of the six heavens of the desire realm (kāmadhātu). In standard classifications, such as the one in the Abhidharmakośa, it is ranked as the fourth of the six counting from below. This god realm is where all future buddhas are said to dwell before taking on their final rebirth prior to awakening. There, the Buddha Śākyamuni lived his preceding life as the bodhisattva Śvetaketu. When departing to take birth in this world, he appointed the bodhisattva Maitreya, who will be the next buddha of this eon, as his Dharma regent in Tuṣita. For an account of the Buddha’s previous life in Tuṣita, see The Play in Full (Toh 95), 2.12, and for an account of Maitreya’s birth in Tuṣita and a description of this realm, see The Sūtra on Maitreya’s Birth in the Heaven of Joy, (Toh 199).

g.1170 twelve ascetic practices

sbyangs pa'i yon tan bcu gnyis

ལྷུངས་པའི་ཡོན་ཏན་བརྒྱུག་ཉིས། dvādaśadhūtaguṇa

The twelve ascetic practices as set out in this text comprise (1) staying in isolation (āraṇyaka, dgon pa ba), (2) begging for alms (paiṇḍapātika, bsod snyoms pa), (3) wearing cast-off clothes (pāṃśukūlika, phyag dar khrod pa), (4) restricting eating after midday (khalu paścād bhaktika, zas phyis mi len pa), (5) eating the daily meal in a single sitting (ekāsanika, stan gcig pa), (6) accepting just whatever alms have been obtained (prasthapaiṇḍika, ci thob pa'i bsod snyoms len pa), (7) frequenting charnel grounds (śmāśānika, dur khrod pa), (8) sitting in exposed places (ābhyavakāśika, bla gab med pa), (9) sitting under trees (vrkṣamūlika, shing drung pa), (10) sitting upright even during sleep (naiṣadyika, cog pu pa), (11) staying wherever one happens to be (iyathāsaṃstarika, gzhi ji bzhi pa), and (12) owning only three robes (traicīvarika, chos gos gsum pa). They are listed in the text at 32.6. The list varies slightly between texts in both order and content, and the set of twelve in the Mahāvīyūtpatti (127–39) is close but not identical; lists in some texts comprise thirteen items.

g.1171 twelve links of dependent origination

rten cing 'brel bar 'byung ba'i yan lag bcu gnyis

རྟེན་ཅིང་འབྲེལ་བར་འབྱུང་བའི་ཡན་ལག་བརྒྱུག་ཉིས།

dvādaśāṅgapratītyasamutpāda

The twelve links that make up the sequence of dependent origination are (1) ignorance, (2) formative predispositions, (3) consciousness, (4) name and form, (5) sense fields, (6) sensory contact, (7) sensation, (8) craving, (9) grasping, (10) rebirth process, (11) actual birth, and (12) aging and death. See also “dependent origination.”

g.1172 twelve sense fields

skye mched bcu gnyis

སྐྱེ་མཆེད་བརྒྱ་གཉིས།

dvādaśāyatana

These comprise the six inner sense fields and six outer sense fields.

g.1173 twenty higher aspirations

lhag pa'i bsam pa nyi shu

ལྷག་པའི་བསམ་པ་ཉི་ཤུ། vimśatyadhicitta

These twenty higher aspirations (vimśatyadhicitta, lhag pa'i bsam pa nyi shu) are enumerated and explained in the Śatasāhasrikāprajñāpāramitābṛhaddharmakāśikā (Toh 3807, Degé Tengyur vol. 91, F.39.a et seq.). They comprise (1) the supreme aspiration of higher faith in the Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha (sangs rgyas dang chos dang dge 'dun la lhag par dad cing sems pa mchog gi bsam pa); (2) the aspiration of the higher attitude to ethical discipline that adopts the vows of the bodhisattvas' ethical discipline (byang chub sems dpa'i tshul khrims kyi sdom pa yang dag par blang ba la lhag par sems pa'i tshul khrims kyi bsam pa); (3) the aspiration of the higher attitude to perfection in order to achieve the perfections of generosity, tolerance, perseverance, meditative concentration, and wisdom (sbyin pa dang bzod pa dang brtson 'grus dang bsam gtan dang shes rab yang dag par grub par bya ba'i phyir lhag par sems pa'i pha rol tu phyin pa'i bsam pa); (4) the aspiration of the genuine higher attitude concerning the nonself of phenomena and individual persons, ultimate reality, and the profound real nature of phenomena (chos dang gang zag la bdag med pa dang don dam pa dang chos kyi de bzhin nyid zab mo la lhag par sems pa yang dag pa'i don gyi bsam pa); (5) the unchanging and steadfast aspiration that one-pointedly establishes the certainty of complete enlightenment (yang dag par rdzogs pa'i byang chub tu sems rtse gcig tu nges par gyur cing mi 'gyur ba brtan pa'i bsam pa); (6) the impure aspiration of the higher attitude to the level of engagement through belief (mos pas spyod pa'i sa la lhag pa'i bsam pa ma dag pa'i bsam pa); (7) the pure higher aspiration concerning the levels from the first to the eighth (sa dang po nas sa brgyad pa'i bar gyi lhag pa'i bsam pa dag pa); (8) the utterly pure higher aspiration concerning the ninth and concluding [tenth] levels (mthar phyin pa'i sa ste sa dgu pa dang bcu pa'i lhag pa'i bsam pa shin tu dag pa); (9) the higher aspiration concerning the inconceivable might of the extrasensory powers of the buddhas and bodhisattvas (sangs rgyas dang byang chub sems dpa' rnam kyī mngon par shes pa bsam gyis mi khyab pa'i mthu la lhag par bsam pa); (10) the beneficial aspiration that introduces beings to the practice of virtuous action (sems can rnam dge ba byed du 'jug pa phan pa'i bsam pa); (11) the aspiration that is undeceiving concerning the teacher and the object of generosity (bla ma dang sbyin gnas la mi slu ba'i bsam pa); (12) the aspiration to bring about happiness when bodhisattvas associate with conduct in conformity with the Dharma (byang chub sems dpa' chos mthun par spyod pa dang / 'grog na bde bar bya ba'i bsam pa); (13) the aspiration to overpower the minds of those overwhelmed by the afflicted mental states, the subsidiary afflicted mental states, and all the deeds of Māra (nyon mongs pa dang / nye ba'i nyon mongs pa dang bdud kyī las thams cad zil gyis mnan pa dag gi sems kyī dbang du gyur par bya ba'i bsam pa); (14) the aspiration of the view concerning the defects in all formative predispositions ('du byed thams cad la skyon du lta ba'i bsam pa); (15) the aspiration of the view concerning the advantages in the attainment of nirvāṇa (mya ngan las 'das pa la phan yon du lta ba'i bsam pa); (16) the aspiration to constantly cultivate the factors conducive to enlightenment (byang chub kyī phyogs kyī chos rnam rtag tu bsgom pa bya ba'i bsam pa); (17) the aspiration to stay in isolation until one attains conformity with cultivation of those very factors conducive to enlightenment (byang chub kyī phyogs kyī chos de dag nyid bsgom pa dang mthun pa'i bar du dben pa la gnas pa'i bsam pa); (18) the aspiration that disregards mundane materialism, acquisition, and fame ('jig rten gyi zang zing dang / rnyed pa dang bkur sti la mi lta ba'i bsam pa); (19) the aspiration to realize the Great Vehicle, abandoning the Lesser Vehicle (theg pa chung ngu spangs te theg pa chen po rtogs par bya ba'i bsam pa); and (20) the aspiration to accomplish all the aims of all beings (sems can thams cad kyī don thams cad bya ba'i bsam pa).

don dam pa

དོན་དམ་པ། paramārtha

g.1175 ultimate truth

don dam pa'i bden pa

དོན་དམ་པའི་བདེན་པ། paramārthasatya

Ultimate truth is defined as a synonym of emptiness, the ultimate nature of phenomena, in contrast to the relative truth of conventionally experienced perceptions.

g.1176 unappraisable

gzhal du med pa

གཞལ་དུ་མེད་པ།

amāpya

This term in some contexts may refer to a large number equivalent to ten to the power of 57.

g.1177 unattached, liberated, and uncovered like space

nam mkha' ltar chags pa med pas rnam par grol zhing gos pa med pa

ནམ་མཁའ་ལྟར་ཆགས་པ་མེད་པས་རྣམ་པར་གྲོལ་ཞིང་གོས་པ་མེད་པ། ākāśasaṅghavimuktinirupalepa

The 118th meditative stability in chapter 6 and 119th in chapter 8; also mentioned in other chapters.

g.1178 uncaptivated

mi 'phrogs pa

མི་འཕྲོགས་པ།

asaṃhārya

The forty-seventh of the fifty-one meditative stabilities manifested to Sadāprarudita in chapter 73.

g.1179 unchanging nature of reality

chos mi 'gyur ba nyid

ཚོས་མི་འགྱུར་བ་ཉིད།

g.1180 uncommon phenomena

thun mong ma lags pa'i chos

ཐུན་མོང་མ་ལགས་པའི་ཚོས།

asādhāraṇadharmā

Uncommon phenomena from the perspective of ordinary persons, as described in 8.44, include the thirty-seven factors conducive to enlightenment, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, the three gateways to liberation, and all the other attributes up to and including the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1181 unconditioned phenomena

'dus ma byas pa'i chos

འདུས་མ་བྱས་པའི་ཚོས།

asaṃskṛtadharmā

Unconditioned phenomena are defined in 5.13 as those which are nonarising, nondwelling, and nonperishing, while the Ten Thousand (2.82) adds nontransformation with respect to all things, the cessation of desire, the cessation of hatred, the cessation of delusion, the abiding of phenomena in the real nature, reality, the realm of phenomena, maturity with respect to all things, the real nature, the unmistaken real nature, the one and only real nature, and the finality of existence. Although the Prajñāpāramitā analysis ultimately places all phenomena in this category, that analysis derives its force by contrasting with the way in which the various Abhidharma traditions classify the unconditioned, principally including nirvāṇa and in some cases space and certain kinds of cessation.

g.1182 uncontaminated phenomena

zag pa ma mchis pa'i chos · zag pa med pa'i chos

ཟག་པ་མ་མཚིས་པའི་ཚོས། · ཟག་པ་མེད་པའི་ཚོས།

anāsravadharma

Uncontaminated phenomena, as described in 8.40, include the four applications of mindfulness, the four correct exertions, the four supports for miraculous ability, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven branches of enlightenment, the noble eightfold path, the four truths of the noble ones, the eight aspects of liberation, the nine serial steps of meditative absorption, emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, all the gateways of the meditative stabilities and the dhāraṇīs, the ten powers of the tathāgatas, the four fearlessnesses, the four kinds of exact knowledge, great loving kindness, great compassion, and the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas. See also n.257.

g.1183 undimmed and pure sense perception

snang ba rab rib med cing rnam par dag pa

སྒྲུབ་བ་རབ་རིབ་མེད་ཅིང་རྣམ་པར་དག་པ། vitimiraśuddhāloka

Thirty-second of the eighty minor marks.

g.1184 unimpaired

nyams pa med pa

ཉམས་པ་མེད་པ།

asampramuṣita

The 21st meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.1185 unimpaired by all phenomena

chos thams cad nyams pa med pa

ཚོས་ཐམས་ཅད་ཉམས་པ་མེད་པ། sarvadharmāsampramoṣa

A meditative stability.

g.1186 unimpaired extrasensory power

mngon par shes pa mi nyams pa

མངོན་པར་ཤེས་པ་མི་ཉམས་པ།

acyutānāgāminyabhijñā

A meditative stability.

g.1187 union

rnal 'byor

རྣལ་འབྱོར།

yoga

Although the term could be rendered “practice,” “yogic practice,” or simply “yoga,” in these passages the underlying meaning of the term is emphasized. Note that the Sanskrit term translated in this text as “engaged” (yukta) is closely related, even though the Tibetan (brtson) is less so.

g.1188 unity

rnam pa gcig tu 'gyur ba

རྣམ་པ་གཅིག་ཏུ་འགྱུར་བ།

bodhisattvayāna

This is equivalent to the Great Vehicle.

g.1224 venerable

tshe dang ldan pa

ཚེ་དང་ལྷན་པ།

āyusmān

A monk or mendicant of seniority. Āyusmān (tshe dang ldan pa) is a title of respect directed toward a monk or wandering mendicant who is venerable and in a position of seniority, but not a fully realized buddha. (In the Lalitavistara, ch. 26, Śākyamuni famously rejects this title as a suitable term of address for himself. See, e.g., Dudjom Rinpoche 1991: p. 423). Āyusmān may imply one who has held monastic ordination for a significant number of years, and who has some level of realization, but is still “mortal” and tied to cyclic existence, in contrast to the buddhas, who are “immortal.” Even today Thai monks colloquially address each other, using ayusma for someone senior and avuso (“friend”) for someone junior.

zhe gcod pa

ཞེ་གཙོད་པ།

pāruṣya

Sixth of the ten nonvirtuous actions. Also rendered as “harsh words” or “words of reprimand.”

jārāyuja

First of the four modes of birth.

g.1241 voice like the trumpeting of an elephant or the roar of a dragon

glang po'i nga ro dang / 'brug gi dbyangs dang ldan pa

གླང་པོའི་ང་རོ་དང་། འབྲུག་གི་དབྱངས་དང་ལྷན་པ།

gajagarjitajīmūtaghoṣa

Fifty-first of the eighty minor marks.

g.1242 voidness of all phenomena

chos thams cad rnam par dben pa

ཚོས་ཐམས་ཅད་རྣམ་པར་དབེན་པ།

sarvadharmavivikta

The second of twenty-four aspects of the perfection of wisdom taught by Dharmodgata, and realized as meditative stabilities by Sadāprarudita, in chapter 75.

g.1243 Vulture Peak

ri bya rgod 'phungs po

རི་བྱ་ཚོད་འཕྲུངས་པོ།

ṛḍhrakūṭa

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The Ṛḍhrakūṭa, literally Vulture Peak, was a hill located in the kingdom of Magadha, in the vicinity of the ancient city of Rājagṛha (modern-day Rajgir, in the state of Bihar, India), where the Buddha bestowed many sūtras, especially the Great Vehicle teachings, such as the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras. It continues to be a sacred pilgrimage site for Buddhists to this day.

g.1244 Vyūharāja

rnam par bkod pa'i rgyal po

རྣམ་པར་བཀོད་པའི་རྒྱལ་པོ།

vyūharāja

Name of a bodhisattva.

g.1245 Vyūharāja

rgyan gyi rgyal po

སྤྱག་པར་མོས་པར་གྱུར་པ། · བཟང་བར་མོས་པ།

śubhādhimukti

Third of the eight aspects of liberation.

g.1248 when corporeal beings observe physical forms

gzugs can gyis gzugs rnams mthong ba

གཟུགས་ཅན་གྱིས་གཟུགས་རྣམས་མཐོང་བ།

rūpī rūpāṇi paśyati

First of the eight aspects of liberation.

g.1249 when formless beings endowed with internal perception observe external physical forms

nang gzugs med pa'i 'du shes dang ldan pas phyi rol gyi gzugs rnams mthong ba

ནང་གཟུགས་མེད་པའི་འདུ་ཤེས་དང་ལྡན་པས་ཕྱི་རོལ་གྱི་གཟུགས་རྣམས་མཐོང་བ། adhyātmamarūpasamjñī bahirthā rūpāṇi paśyati

Second of the eight aspects of liberation.

g.1250 white-blotched skin

sha bkra

ཤ་བྲག།

kilāsa

The Sanskrit and Tibetan terms are sometimes used to denote leucoderma or vitiligo, a benign skin condition, but the context here suggest this is more likely to be a reference to the pale skin lesions seen in certain forms of leprosy.

g.1251 whites of their eyes and dark pupils are sharply demarcated

spyān dkar nag 'byes pa

ལྷན་དཀར་ནག་འབྲེས་པ།

abhinīlanetratā

Thirty-first of the thirty-two major marks. The Sanskrit term indicates a deep blue color instead.

g.1252 wind disorders

rlung gyi nad · rlung las gyur pa'i nad

རླུང་གྱི་ནད། · རླུང་ལས་གྱུར་པའི་ནད།

vātikāvyādhi

First of the four kinds of disease.

g.1253 wisdom

shes rab

ཤེས་རབ།

prajñā

In the context of the perfections, wisdom is the sixth of the six perfections. The translation of prajñā (shes rab) by “wisdom” here defers to the precedent established by Edward Conze in his writings. It has a certain poetic resonance which more accurate renderings—“discernment,” “discriminative awareness,” or “intelligence”—unfortunately lack. It should be remembered that in Abhidharma, prajñā is classed as one of the five object-determining mental states (pañcaviṣayaniyata, yul nges lnga), alongside “will,” “resolve,” “mindfulness,” and “meditative stability.” Following Asaṅga’s Abhidharma-samuccaya, Jamgon Kongtrul (TOK, Book 6, Pt. 2, p. 498), defines prajñā as “the discriminative awareness that analyzes specific and general characteristics.” Therefore “wisdom” in this context is to be understood in the cognitive or analytical Germanic sense of witan or weis (Dayal 1932: p. 136) and not as an abstract “body of knowledge,” or in any aloof and mysterious theosophical sense. Nor indeed is there any association with the Greek sophia. Also translated here as “discriminative awareness.”

See also “perfection of wisdom.”

g.1254 wishlessness

smon pa med pa

སློན་པ་མེད་པ།

apraṇihita

The ultimate absence of any wish, desire, or aspiration, even those directed towards buddhahood. One of the three gateways to liberation; the other two are emptiness and signlessness.

g.1255 wishlessness as a gateway to liberation

rnam par thar pa'i sgo smon pa med pa

རྣམ་པར་ཐར་པའི་སློ་སློན་པ་མེད་པ།

apraṇihitavimokṣamukha

Third of the three gateways to liberation.

g.1256 without a self

bdag med

བདག་མེད།

ātmāsadbhūtatva · nairātmya

Selflessness denotes the lack of inherent existence in persons and also, more subtly, in all physical and mental phenomena. Also translated here as “nonself.”

g.1257 without apprehending anything

mi dmigs pa'i tshul du

མི་དམིགས་པའི་རྩྭ་ལ་དུ།

anupalambhayogena

The expression “without apprehending anything” suggests that bodhisattva great beings should teach without perceiving anything as inherently existing. Lamotte, The Treatise on the Great Virtue of Wisdom, vol. IV, p. 1763, note 564, renders this term as “by a method of non perceiving.”

g.1258 without clumsiness

'khrul pa mi mnga' · 'khrul pa med pa

འཇུལ་པ་མི་མངའ། · འཇུལ་པ་མེད་པ།

nāsti skhalitam

First of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1259 without differentiating perceptions

'du shes sna tshogs mi mnga' · tha dad pa'i 'du shes med pa

འདུ་ཤེས་སྣ་ཚོགས་མི་མངའ། · ཐ་དད་པའི་འདུ་ཤེས་མེད་པ།

nāsti nānātoasaṃjñā

Fourth or fifth of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1260 without enmity

gtsugs med pa

གཏུགས་མེད་པ། asamucchita

g.1261 without false memories

dgongs pa nyams pa mi mnga' · bsnyel ba med pa

དགོངས་པ་ཉམས་པ་མི་མངའ། · བསྐྱེལ་བ་མེད་པ།

nāsti muṣitasmr̥titā

Third of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1262 without fear

'jigs pa med pa

འཇིགས་པ་མེད་པ།

[viṛta]

The 48th meditative stability in chapter 6. The translation here follows the Tibetan; in the Sanskrit texts, this meditative stability is viṛta, “uncovered.”

g.1263 without obstacles

bar chad med pa'i ting nge 'dzin

བར་ཆད་མེད་པའི་ཉིང་ངེ་འཛིན། ānantaryasamādhi

A meditative stability.

g.1264 without settled focus

gnas su bya ba med pa

གནས་སུ་བྱ་བ་མེད་པ།

niradhiṣṭhāna

The 87th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8.

g.1265 without the indifference that lacks discernment

ma brtags pa'i btang snyoms med pa · so sor ma brtags pa'i btang snyoms med pa

མ་བརྟགས་པའི་བྱང་སྟོམས་མེད་པ། · སོ་སོར་མ་བརྟགས་པའི་བྱང་སྟོམས་མེད་པ། apratisaṃkhyāyopeksā

Sixth of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1266 without uncomposed minds

thugs mnyam par ma bzhag pa mi mnga' · sems mnyam par ma bzhag pa med pa

ཐུགས་མཉམ་པར་མ་བཞག་པ་མི་མངའ། · སེམས་མཉམ་པར་མ་བཞག་པ་མེད་པ། nāsty asamāhitacitta

Fourth or fifth of the eighteen distinct qualities of the buddhas.

g.1267 words of reprimand

zhe gcod pa · zhe gcod pa'i tshig

ཞེ་གཅོད་པ། · ཞེ་གཅོད་པའི་ཚིག།

pāruṣya · pārūṣavacana

Sixth of the ten nonvirtuous actions. Also rendered as “verbal abuse” or “harsh words.”

g.1268 world of Patient Endurance

'jig rten gyi khams mi mjed · mi mjed

འཇིག་རྟེན་གྱི་ཁམས་མི་མཛེད། · མི་མཛེད།

sahālokadhātu · sahā

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

The name for our particular world system, the universe of a thousand million worlds, or trichiliocosm, in which our four-continent world is located.

Although it is sometimes said that it can refer only to our own four-continent world around Mount Meru, the sūtras largely seem to equate it with this trichiliocosm, and this is confirmed by scholars like Jamgön Kongtrul (see The Treasury of Knowledge, Book One). Each trichiliocosm is ruled by a god Brahmā; thus, in this context, he bears the title of Sahāmpati, Lord of Sahā. Our world system of Sahā, or Sahālokadhātu, is also described as being the buddhafiield of the Buddha Śākyamuni. He teaches the Dharma here to beings who adhere to inferior ways and perceive this universe as an impure buddhafiield contaminated with the five degenerations (pañcakaṣāya, snyigs ma lnga): the degeneration of time, sentient beings, place, lifespan, and mental afflictions (see The Teaching of Vimalakīrti, Toh 176). It is also mentioned as the field of activity of all the thousand buddhas of this Fortunate Eon (see The White Lotus of Compassion, Toh 112).

The name Sahā possibly derives from the Sanskrit √sah, “to bear, endure, or withstand.” It is often interpreted as alluding to the inhabitants of this world having to endure suffering. The Tibetan translation, mi mjed, follows along the same lines. It literally means “not unbearable,” in the sense that beings here are able to bear the suffering they experience.

g.1269 world of Yama

gshin rje'i 'jig rten

གཤིན་རྗེའི་འཇིག་རྟེན།

yamaloka

The land of the dead ruled over by Yama, the Lord of Death. While the dominion of Yama is often said to include the hells, too, in this and other texts “the world of Yama” mostly figures in mentions of the three lower realms and can be taken as referring to the realm of anguished spirits (preta), where beings generally suffer from deprivation, hunger, and thirst as the ripening of harmful actions driven by miserly attachment and stinginess. In a few passages, however (in chapters 32 and 46), the anguished spirits are explicitly mentioned as well as the beings of the world of Yama, and it is not clear what the distinction may be.

g.1270 worthy repository

snod du gyur pa

སྣོད་དུ་གྱུར་པ།

pātragata

A meditative stability.

g.1271 wrong view

lta ba

ལྷ་བ།

dṛṣṭi

Second of the four torrents.

g.1272 wrong views

log par lta ba

ལོག་པར་ལྷ་བ།

mithyādṛṣṭi

Tenth of the ten nonvirtuous actions.

g.1273 yakṣa

gnod sbyin

གནོད་སྦྱིན།

yakṣa

A class of male and female spirits, depicted as holding choppers, cleavers, and swords. Inhabiting mountainous areas and sylvan groves, their name in Tibetan (gnod sbyin, “granting harm”) suggests a malign nature.

g.1274 Yama

gshin rje

གཤིན་རྗེ།

yama

Lord of death. See also “world of Yama.”

g.1275 Yāma

mtshe ma

མཚོ་མ།

yāma

Third god realm of desire, meaning “Strifeless.”

g.1276 Yaśodharā

grags 'dzin

གྲགས་འཛིན།

yaśodharā

The wife of Prince Siddhartha and mother of his son Rāhula. She took up an ascetic lifestyle after his departure from the palace, and later, when women were finally allowed to go forth, became a nun under Mahāprajāpatī. She attained the level of arhat and was declared foremost among nuns possessing the superknowledges.

g.1277 yawning lion

seng ge rnam par bsgyings pa

སེང་གེ་རྣམ་པར་བསྐྱེད་ས་པ།

siṃhaviṅṅmbhita

The 28th meditative stability in chapters 6 and 8, and a meditative stability on its own. According to the Long Commentary on the Hundred Thousand Lines (Toh 3807, F.53.a), it refers to a tathāgata’s power to overcome or even preempt all opposition by sheer power and magnificence.

g.1278 Yerpa

yer pa

ཡེར་པ།

A site in Tibet near Lhasa, originally a place of retreat, with many caves and small temples.

g.1279 Yeshé Dé

ye shes sde

ཡེ་ཤེས་སྡེ།

Definition from the 84000 Glossary of Terms:

Yeshé Dé (late eighth to early ninth century) was the most prolific translator of sūtras into Tibetan. Altogether he is credited with the translation of more than one hundred sixty sūtra translations and more than one hundred additional translations, mostly on tantric topics. In spite of Yeshé Dé's great importance for the propagation of Buddhism in Tibet during the imperial era, only a few biographical details about this figure are known. Later sources describe him as a student of the Indian teacher Padmasambhava, and he is also credited with teaching both sūtra and tantra widely to students of his own. He was also known as Nanam Yeshé Dé, from the Nanam (sna nam) clan.

g.1280 yojana

dpag tshad

དཔག་ཚད།

yojana

A measure of distance sometimes translated as “league,” but with varying definitions. The Sanskrit term denotes the distance yoked oxen can travel in a day or before needing to be unyoked. From different canonical sources the distance represented varies between four and ten miles.

g.1281 youthful one

gzhon nur gyur pa

གཞོན་ནུར་གྱུར་པ།

kumārabhūta

The term, depending on context, can refer either to bodhisattvas who remain celibate, or to bodhisattvas at the advanced level of “crown prince” who are awaiting the final stages to buddhahood that include regency and consecration. See also “level of a crown prince.”

Thus did I hear

At one time

The Lord (bhagavat)

Dwelt at Rājagṛha—on Gṛdhrakūṭa Hill.

with a great community of monks, numbering five thousand monks,

all worthy ones... with outflows dried up,

With outflows dried up—

Without afflictions

Fully controlled—

with their minds well freed and their wisdom well freed thoroughbreds great bull elephants,

With their work done, their task accomplished with their burden laid down.
with their own goal accomplished.
with the fetters that bound them to existence broken.
with their hearts well freed by perfect understanding.
in perfect control of their whole mind with nuns numbering five hundred
... with a vision of the Dharma,

Venerable Śāriputra having thus inquired, the Lord said to him, “Śāriputra, here bodhisattva great beings practicing the perfection of wisdom do not, even while they are bodhisattvas, see a bodhisattva. They do not see even the word bodhisattva. They do not see awakening either, and they do not see the perfection of wisdom. They do not see that ‘they practice,’ and they do not see that ‘they do not practice.’ They also do not see that ‘while practicing they practice and while not practicing do not practice,’ and they also do not see that ‘they do not practice, and do not not practice as well.’ They do not see form. Similarly, they do not see feeling, perception, volitional factors, or consciousness either,”

What are the dhāraṇī doors? The sameness of all letters and syllables, the sameness of all spoken words, the syllable-doors, the syllable-entrances. What then are the syllable-doors, the syllable-entrances? The syllable a is the door to all dharmas being unproduced from the very beginning (ādy-anutpannatvād); ra is a door to the insight that all dharmas are without dirt (rajas),

“Also, Subhūti, awakening is a word for mere designation.”

“true reality means awakening.”
